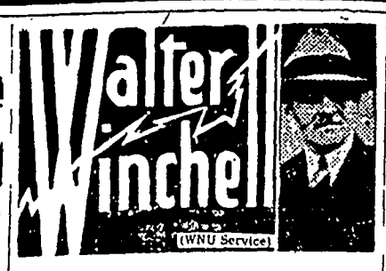
"Raise Auto Ceilings"—headline. Fine! Bumps on our head are pretty numerous.



Manhattan Magic:

The wild rumors (unfounded) that navy and army discharges had been frozen reminded us of one of the wildest. . . . It was the report that Dorothy Thompson (the columnist) would be the GOP candidate for President. . . . This is how the "story" grew from a joke: At a luncheon date between John ("Inside Europe, etc.") Gunther and Philip Jordan of the London News-Chronicle, the Britisher told Gunther he had met Miss Thompson the night before.

"What a woman!" Jordan exclaimed. "I wouldn't be a bit surprised if the Republicans nominate her for President in 1940."

Gunther (kidding) said: "If they do, she'll be elected!"

When Mr. Jordan got home he relayed "the gag" to H. R. Knickerbocker, the war reporter, who passed it on to Randolph Churchill, who cabled it seriously for his chatter col'm in London. . . . One week later it appeared in a British newsmagazine as the "latest tip from well-informed Washington circles" and was cabled (just that way) back to the United States.

The final touch was a lulu. It inspired a newspaper over here to run a straw vote on Miss Thompson's chances!

Wisdom for the UNO from the mouth of a tot. It was overheard at a movie theatre, where "Captain Kidd" was revived. . . . "Who are all those men fighting?" asked the child. . . . "Pirates," mother explained. . . . "What are they fighting about?" . . . "Treasure." . . . "What's treasure?" . . . "Gold, silver and other precious things." . . . "Will some of those men be killed fighting for the treasures?" . . . "Yes, I suppose so." . . . "Why don't they all become friends and share the treasures, instead, Mommy?"

It is no secret that Stalin and Churchill quarreled during the war. After the Teheran confab this anecdote was popular in Moscow: The Shah of Persia made a gift of an 11-year-old girl to Churchill. . . . Some of Stalin's advisors were shocked by the Oriental custom and urged him to do something about it. . . . But with a twinkle in his eyes Stalin said: "Don't worry. By the time Churchill makes up his mind—she will be an old woman!"

The Press-Box: One sane voice was raised among the international babble of threats and protests. It was Cordell Hull's eloquent plea for patience, reason and co-operation. Yet his words were relegated to inside pages. Apparently only diplomatic stupidity rates front-page attention. . . . The Sovvy sheet (Pravda) pounced on Churchill for endangering "peace" by hurling threats at Russia. But the same editorial taunted Britain with threats. . . . That's the trouble with today's sad planet. Nations claim they desire peace without acting like they believe their own words. . . . Those lashing Russia with the Soviet-Nazi Pact neglect to mention Britain also signed a pact with Germany—at Munich. . . . In a curious display of logic one New York editorialist argued that G.I. newspapers shouldn't have as much freedom of press as civilian papers. Depriving soldiers of a free press is a shabby payoff for their protection of every paper's freedom—including the U. S. press.

The Comic Section: Tallulah Bankhead prob'ly doesn't recall it but it was during the run of her hit, "The Little Foxes." . . . Several back-stage visitors were from the South. Two from Alabama said they were cousins to the Bankhead tribe—they mentioned places, dates and many names which didn't mean much to Talu. . . . "Oh," she said, "everybody from the South is my cousin, it seems." . . . This was overheard by another Southerner, nervously waiting to meet her. . . . "Though I'm a great admirer of yours," he gulp'd, "I'm NOT your cousin!" . . . To which she grinned: "Then you're NO Suthinner!"

The Moom-Pitchizz: Rita Hayworth makes "Gilda" a tense romantic eyefilm. The suspense-laden script can only be matched by thrilling visual roller-coasting around Rita's curves. . . . "Cinderella Jones" is a feathery slice of skylarkery which has all the fragility of a soap bubble. Pert Joan Leslie keeps it bubbling. . . . "Whistle Stop" offers a bare knuckle tale, sinewy enough to wrestle with. George Raft gives the picture its muscles. . . . The British lion's latest cinematic cub is "Vacation from Marriage."

Sounds in the Night: At the Greenwich Village Inn: "Churchill's speeches prove he's just an old Tory-teller." . . . At Armando's: "They caught him trying to smuggle a dollar bill into Miami." . . . At the Blue Angel: "'After Churchill's speech Hitler must be laughing up his shroud." . . . At Ciro's: "I don't like his gigolooks." . . . At the Gamecock: "She's been married so often they no longer throw rice—they throw ditto marks." . . . The Garden: "Poor guy—he's suffering from femininsomnia."

Electrical Appliances Improvement Over Old

By AL JEDLICKA

gadgets will make postwar America a better ich to live and work, in the home, on the farm, ry or warehouse. Inventions and innovations held past four years because of war are now coming your acquaintance.

al improvement in erators is in the in- e capacity, with one collapsible shelves placement of larger bottom bins, and an- ing the bottom panel into a receptacle for vegetables.

Efficiency and economy of effort feature smaller appliances like coffee makers, toasters and waffle irons. One coffee maker, for instance, capable of brewing from one to eight cups, shuts off at 204 degrees, tests having shown that boiling brings out the bitter flavor in the beverage. With the coffee made, enough temperature is then maintained to keep the liquid warm.

A new toaster will allow the bread to pop out when crisped or retain it if desired and maintain its warmth, while a new waffle iron flashes a light to advise the homemaker when it is sufficiently hot and possesses four grids to eliminate waiting for multiple servings.

Other interesting new innovations include a small electrically-heated beanery for the preparation of foods needing slow treatment and a mixmaster which automatically separates the beaters from their sockets.

A revolutionary combination washing machine and dish washer promises to dispel blue Mondays for homemakers. Of eight-pound capacity, the washing machine can be transformed into a dishwasher by a change of tubs, with racks provided for placing wares to be cleansed by a squirting action. Made especially for apartment houses or laundry stations, another washing machine with nine pounds capacity can be set for a light, heavy or average wash and then started off with a coin.

With studies having shown that a homemaker lifted hundreds of pounds during each ironing with the old, heavy units, a new three and one-half pound iron has been produced.

Other new postwar innovations include a combination radio-phonograph, with records inserted into a side drawer for automatic setting and playing, and floor lamps with an incandescent tubing running around the ordinary reflector to throw increased reading light without any heat.

Butter and buttermilk for home consumption are available at the flick of a switch in the rural home equipped with a new electric churn. The portable machine weighs only 16 pounds, has a high speed motor, a glass barrel and several other wartime improvements, according to its manufacturer. The glass barrel, which permits the operator to watch the churn's progress, comes in three- and five-gallon sizes. Its V-shaped aluminum agitator is suspended from the motor by its drive shaft, and is easily removed for cleaning.

War veterans who lost arms in combat will soon find electrically operated devices to help them in handling autos and tractors. By pushing a button, a disabled veteran may be able to hold a job in a factory, or shop, or in a warehouse. One Chicago manufacturer has brought out an electric propelled hand truck which will handle a 6,000-pound load through fingertip control.

Farmers Can Pay Blue Cross Dues To Farm Bureau

ETHLYN, MO. — Farmers may enroll in the Blue Cross for themselves and their families through their county farm bureau, Mrs. Paul Palmer, national secretary of the Associated Women of the American Farm Bureau federation, has pointed out in a recent statement issued here.

"Farmers may pay their Blue Cross dues quarterly," Mrs. Palmer stated, "when they pay their farm bureau dues When hospital care is needed, there are no questions asked. The Blue Cross identification card is the passport to more than 3,600 accredited hospitals in the United States and Canada."

Farmers, Mrs. Palmer said, have learned in the last few decades that early hospitalization means early recovery. "Through radio, the rural press and magazines they have come to realize that their fathers' habit of tolerating minor illnesses until they reached the point where the condition was beyond help, was foolish — to say the least. The care of our sons by army and navy hospitals has clearly demonstrated the value of scientific medicine, good nursing care, and prompt treatment. Today, farmers demand the same health advantages for their families as do the people who live in cities and large towns. The health of the farmer who produces the food for America's tables is fully as important as the health of the factory worker.

"There is a great need for additional hospitals in rural areas, and farmers are actively supporting national and state legislation providing for a survey of health facilities which will lead to the construction of much needed hospitals."

Lack of Trained Doctors Affects Farmers' Health

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Rural areas — even with their sunlight and fresh air, freedom from industrial dust and fumes, and absence of dense crowds where diseases can spread — are losing the health advantage they once held over the cities, says the agricultural department.

The scarcity of rural doctors is reflected by a survey showing that before the war, in the thousand most rural and isolated counties of the nation, there were so few medical men that each had to serve an average of 1,700 persons, while in the larger cities there was a doctor for each 650 persons.

During the war, the rural average dropped as low as one doctor for 3,000 to 5,000 persons, because rural doctors almost everywhere exceeded their quotas in entering the armed forces.

Doctors and dentists, the report says, tend to shun rural counties because they feel they can make a better living in cities and have greater access to modern hospitals, technical equipment and professional contacts.

The rural shortage also reflects the department says, a failure of many states to provide educational opportunities for doctors. It says that almost half of all young doctors now come from medical schools in five major industrial states, while 18 states, mostly rural, turn out no medical graduates from their schools.

In World War II, youths from farms showed considerably more physical defects than those from cities.

C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Apprenticeship Training Plans for Veterans

State approved labor-management committees are now recognized by the veterans' administration as institutions eligible to provide apprenticeship courses for veterans under Public Law 16, for disabled veterans, and under the G.I. bill of rights.

The committees when approved by the appropriate state agency will be responsible for: (1) acceptance of applications for veterans training, (2) determination of establishments in which training is to be provided; (3) arranging for placement of veteran and (4) assurance the establishment is providing a standard course.

Veterans administration commitments on homes under the guaranty provisions of the G.I. bill now amounts to $134,545,000, on business loans, $6,814,000, and on farms, $2,721,205. Of 97,728 applications for loans received up to February 23, 81,632 were approved. There were 73,553 applications for loans on homes approved, 2,233 on farms and 5,576 on business loans.

Approximately one in four of the 10,610,000 veterans discharged as of March 1, have enrolled for readjustment compensation and survey shows that the average veterans only draw about five or six weeks' allowance. Approximately 2,500,000 have received compensation and less than half that number are currently enrolled. Some 500,000 withdrew their claims before receiving first checks. This indicates the peak of demobilization has passed and that veterans are rapidly obtaining jobs, the VA said.

Questions and Answers

Q. My brother, after being discharged last March, 1945, from the marines for wounds received on Guam, is now called to the hospital for observation for 30 days. Will his wife and children receive any allotment or aid from the government while he is there? — Reader, Webster, Mass.

A. If your brother was actually separated from the marines and obtained his honorable discharge, the answer is no. The general rule is that he cannot be discharged unless he is physically fit. It could be that some repair job was done and surgeons wanted to check it at the end of a year.

Q. My son enlisted in the navy in May, 1945. He had an allotment paper made out and sent to me, but at the time I did not feel that I really needed it and did not fill out the questionnaire. Ever since he had this paper sent to me he has only received a small amount of his pay. What can he do to get his full pay check?—Mrs. P. C., Orrick, Mo.

A. The navy department says there is no paper for the wife or mother to fill out. If the allotment, however, has been deducted from his pay, write to Field Services, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department, Cleveland, Ohio, giving serial number, name, duty and rate.

Q. My husband and I have been separated six years. He has a bonus from World War I that has never been cashed. He left it with me and said it was mine. He is now in very poor health with a heart ailment. In case of death, could I cash this and if so, how?—Mrs. H. R. R., Battle Creek, Mich.

A. The veterans' administration says this is a legal question. In general the bonus would go to the legal heirs or assigns of the veteran. Suggest that you write to your nearest veterans administration office and give them full particulars, or consult your attorney.

Q. My husband has chronic arthritis of the spine and right hip and is totally disabled. He is only rated 20 per cent and thinks he should receive more. He was denied more over a year ago. How can he get his pension raised?—Mrs. T. O. G., Milwaukee, Wis.

A. There is a sub-regional veterans administration board in Milwaukee. Suggest you appeal your case to this board. You have right of appeal.

Q. My son volunteered for the navy in November, 1941. He has spent 45 months overseas. I want to know if he is eligible for a discharge or state-side duty and if so who does he get in touch with?—Mrs. J. B., Foxworth, Miss.

A. A general rule is that a "tour of duty" at sea is 24 months when he would become eligible for shore duty in the States. It is, however, up to the theater commander and depends on whether your son enlisted in the regular navy before Pearl Harbor or was drafted afterwards.

Double Bill Planned for Central City Drama Festival

CENTRAL CITY, COLO. — The famed old opera house of this equally famed old mining town will have its glamorous presentation again in 1946. This announcement has been made by Frank Ricketson Jr., president of the Central City Opera House association.

A double bill — Mozart's colorful, romantic "Abduction from the Seraglio" and Verdi's wistful-dramatic "Traviata" — will mark the re-establishment of the Central City drama festival, scheduled to open Saturday evening, July 6.

The festival will continue for three weeks and the presentation of the Mozart opus will fulfill a hope long held by the late Anne Evans, one of the founders of the festival, who invested several thousand dollars in having the "Abduction from the Seraglio," with its Oriental intrigue, passion, romance, scored and translated into a modern frame.

The opening of the 1946 festival promises to be as brilliant as that which witnessed the opening of the opera house. Period costumes will again prevail among the patrons who will arrive not only from cities and towns of Colorado but from all sections of the country if inquiries to the association headquarters may be regarded as an index of interest.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for April 14

HOW JESUS' FRIENDS RESPONDED

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:16-20; 5:18-20; 10:46, 52; Luke 5:27, 28.
MEMORY SELECTION—He left all, rose up, and followed him.—Luke 5:28.

Friendship calls for an exchange —not of gifts or possessions necessarily, but of service, love and fellowship.

The friends of Jesus responded to the warmth of His affection and the appeal of His call, and they gave themselves in life and service to Him.

Many in the church have forgotten that part of the friendship of Jesus Christ. They want to count Him as their friend, they expect much of Him; but they give little or nothing in return. Their love is cold, their service indifferent, their witness powerless.

Not every one of Jesus' friends is called to be a preacher or a teacher. He needs those who will be His faithful followers, just a living testimony without special office or message.

To effectively present the contrasts of our lesson, we have arranged the verses in slightly different sequence. Among the friends of Jesus

I. Some Became Preachers (Mark 1:16-20)

These men had met Jesus before (John 1:35-51), but now He was ready to call them away from their daily occupation as fishermen and make them "fishers of men."

Such a change was not an easy one to make. It meant the giving up of an established earthly calling, a place in the community, home life and family, for the service of the Lord. That was to bring persecution, ridicule, poverty and loneliness. But "straightway they forsook their nets."

Let the members of the church and pastors be on the alert to sense the call of God to young men and women to the ministry and to the mission field, and then let them do everything possible to encourage them on their way.

II. Others Became Followers (Mark 10:46, 52).

When Jesus came by, blind Bartimaeus began to cry, "Jesus, son of David have mercy on me" (v. 47). Many around him tried to hush his voice (v. 48), but he cried the more.

Through that babel of voices Jesus heard him, stopped and sent for him, and healed him. The ear of our Lord is always attuned to hear the cry of the one in need, and His heart is quick to respond to his call. He can hear the cry of the repentant sinner through all the confusing sounds of our day.

Bartimaeus became a "follower" of Jesus. He probably had no position in the church, no call to preach, but what a testimony he had. (cf. John 9:25).

Jesus needs simple, steady followers. Men and women with a plain, effective testimony of salvation. The army of the Lord is not made up of generals and officers only. Perhaps we have more of them than we need.

III. Some Stayed at Home (Mark 5:18-20).

This striking story of the deliverance of the mad man shows the importance of testimony at home. The people had asked Jesus to leave (v. 17) because in delivering the maniac He had caused some swine to go mad and run into the sea.

These men needed a witness, and the most effective possible word to them would come from the delivered demoniac. He wanted to go with Jesus, but at the Master's word he stayed at home.

It is hard to leave home and loved ones to go afar to witness for Jesus Christ, but sometimes it is easier to speak for Him in a strange land than at home. Even Jesus found no honor in His own city.

If you are called to witness for the Lord in the small circle of your own family or community, trust God to make that word for Jesus tremendously effective. He can do it!

IV. Others Left Home and Business (Luke 5:27, 28).

Levi—better known to us as Matthew — was "a member of that hated group of renegade Jews, who served the Roman invader and helped him in his cruel work of wringing extortionate taxes from the people" (Earl L. Douglass). As a result, he was rich and undoubtedly had a fine home and every desirable material possession.

He had come to know Jesus and when the call came suddenly to follow Jesus, he did not hesitate; he did not stop to gather up his money; he did not sell his house; but he stood up and left all, and followed Jesus.

If Jesus really means everything to a man or a woman there is nothing in this world that can hold him back when Jesus calls. He is ready to go to the ends of the earth, and let whosoever will care for the business, his possessions, everything (cf. Matt. 19-29).

Schooling and Births

How the number of years women devote to their education relatively lowers the birth rate among them is revealed by statistics collected for the first time during the 1940 census and covering 2,638,000 married white women aged 45-49 years, according to Collier's.

Those who had completed one to four years of grade school had an average of 4.33 children and those who had completed eight years had an average of 2.78; while the women who had finished college averaged 1.23 children.

NEWS OF OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Senior Class News
—Ruth Bell.

The Seniors have been busy the last few weeks working on their class play, "The Panther's Claw."

We have been studying this week for our six weeks tests.

In Literature class we are studying grammar and this week we have studied pronouns.

The Bookkeeping class is now working on Partnerships and Corporations. We find that as the days go buy that Bookkeeping becomes more difficult.

Electricity is the topic of discussion in Physics.

The Speech class has been giving three to five minute speeches utilizing a joke in each.

Junior Class News
—Elizabeth Goll

In Algebra III we are studying with problems on square root. They are really getting tough but a little studying on them will help.

Our six weeks test papers in Typing and as Mrs. Harvey says, "They are very dissapointing." We agree! This week our aim is for accuracy.

As a theme for our Junior and Senior Banquet we have chosen the "Fiesta." The date for this has not been definitely set but plans are for the first part of May.

"Grammatized Usage" is our problem in English.

The Juniors are all very appreciative to Mr. Kingery for letting us by without a test on Monday. (We had to have our note books in though.) Now we are working on the chapter: "Political Parties and Politics."

—Ruth Kurtz.

This is six weeks test week and everyone has been cramming to learn those last minute details. By the looks of some of our test returns, it looks as though we should have done a little more cramming.

In English this week we finished the poem "Gareth and Lynette," and much to our surprise, at least mine, it was really interesting. We also reviewed for our six weeks test which was over the correct use of pronouns and verbs.

In Geometry we are studying about similar triangles.

After a week of review and quizes I believe we are all supposed to be ready for six weeks tests in World History, but some of us never could review. The World History test really was'nt bad but we are glad it is over for another six weeks.

Biology for the past week has been the study of the control of diseases. I think it would help all of us to follow a few of these rules.

The Sophomores who were in the music contest at Britt Friday were LaVonne Beier, Donna Heivilin, Esther Klinge, Helen Suckow, Shirley Stille, Alice Anderson and Ruth Kurtz. The girls took part in the Mixed Chorus and the Girls Glee Club.

The boys taking part in the Mixed Chorus were Edward Grosshuesch, Carolyn Albers, Billy Lacey, and Darwin Wille.

Late Spring Burning Is Menance To Wildlife

--Research proves that spring burning does not improve pasture or hay land. In fact, fire destroys the organic matter with which soils are enriched. Late spring burning is particularly bad from a game management standpoint. At this time of the year almost every grassland fire burns alive nests of helpless baby rabbits. Those same grass lands harbor the nests of ground nesting birds, and even a fast-moving fire will invariably destroy the nest and its contents. Burning is unwise, especially during April and May, is a serious menace to wildlife populations.

SPRING STATE PARK ATTENDANCE HIGH

Iowa State Parks Again Open To The Pulic

State park custodians report unusually large, early attendance and attribute the many visitors to unseasonably mild weather, along with one of the earliest wild flower displays since the establishment of the state park system in 1919. Although rental cabins will not be available until after May 1st, all park roads and picnic areas are in excellent shape and in anticipation of park attendance reaching pre-war levels, hundreds of picnic tables and benches have been taken out of storage and placed in the public areas.

The Conservation Commission does not expect park attendance to reach the 3,600,000 record of 1941, however, a 50 percent increase over last season's attendance is expected with the possibility that two and one-half million will find recreation in Iowa's 86 state areas.

A W.H.O. Radio station group composed of Jerry and Zelda, Happy Al and Shorty Hogan have been engaged to entertain the Farm Bureau famlies present at this meeting Every 1946 Farm Bureau family is invited to attend.

CATFISH SEASON OPENED APRIL 15

The season on one of Iowa's most important sport fish, the channel cat, opened April 15th, and will remain open through November. Cat fishing has gained in importance in recent years until it rivals in popularity its near relative, the bullhead. There is a continuous open season on bullheads along with carp, buffalo, quilback, gar, dogfish and sheephead, and already reports of good bullhead fishing have been received from some of the major northern Iowa lakes. Catfishing in most of Iowa's streams has been excellent the past two years and the Conservation Commission expects it to be good again this year, however, early season sucess will depend on stream conditions, high muddy water often making April and May fishing unpredictable. The legal length of channel fish is 12 inches, and daily catch limits is 15.

The trout season opens May 1st in the northeast Iowa trout streams with a daily catch limit of 8, minimum length 7 inches. The 15th of May will see the season open on northern pike, wall-eyed pike, yellow perch, silver and striped bass. The season on nesting fish, including the mall - mouthed bass, the sun-fish and blue-gills opens June 15th.

Snow Here April 18th!

North Iowa was visited by a late snow last Thursday morning, but which soon melted.

Several inches of snow was reported in the northeast part of the state.

MARCILLE JOSTEN LEADS IN 'A' GRADES

Supt. Kingery List Honor Students At K. H. S.

With the school year drawing to a close, several new faces appeared on the Klemme High School Honor Roll for the 5th six weeks period. Requirements are that a student must receive a grade of B or better in each subject.

Marcille Josten, a Junior, took top honors by being the only student to receive a grade of A in all four subjects. Other Juniors were Dean Jacobs and Lois Ann Lau with three A's each, and Elizabeth Goll, who earned one A and three B's.

Seniors Had Good Record

Thirty-nine per cent of the Senior class made the honor roll for a new class record. Two perennials, Ruth Bell and Jeanne Trumbell earned their accustomed scores of three A's and one B each. Lois Ann Avery, Ronald Brinkman, and William J. Cosgriff hit a fifty per cent average with two A's and two B's each, while Elsie Gerdes earned an A to match her three B's, and Nellie Lou Sherwood finished the period with straight B's.

In the Sophomore class Alice Anderson headed the list with three A's; LaVonne Beier was second with two A's; Betty Ann Kramer followed with one A, and Donna Heivilin earned straight B's.

Iris Rosendahl was the only Freshman to appear this time as she pulled down a B garde in all subjects.

NEW LEGION POST FORMED AT GOODELL

Bill Dempsey Heads New Goodell Organization

Goodell Veterans of World wars 1 and 2 were called to a meeting Tuesday evening in the Goodell Community Hall. An American Legion was reorganized and will be known as the Robbins-Christenson Post. 420 Officers eletced were: Commander, Bill Demsey; vicecommander, Lee Robbins; adjutant. Lawence Christie; finance officer, Bill Butts; chaplin, Cliff Estel; sergeant-at-arms, Kenneth Boller, and service officer, Darwin Boller.

Mr. Demsey has obtained Frank Miles of Des Moines for speaker at a public meeting of the American Legion at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

THREE OLD SCHOOLS WILL BECOME HOMES

County Supt. Charles Whitney announces the sale of a rural school building in District No. 5 in Concord township.

The schoolhouse, no longer needed for school purposes, was sold at auction and sold for $1,500. This is the third schoolhouse sold in recent days.

Two more will be sold April 16 at Districts No. 1 and 9 in Major township. The schoolhouses are being purchased to be remodeled into homes according to Supt. Whitney.

Small Bore Rifles Are Dangerous, Be Careful

Gopher control has been in full swing the past two weeks, and the little pests seem to be uncommonly numerous. Plinkers with .22 caliber rifles are cautioned to be extremely careful where they point their guns. Some of the more powerful .22 slugs are dangerous to humans and livestock up to one mile. When shooting gophers, be sure to secure the farmer's consent to trespass on his land, and also make sure to carry guns unloaded and taken down or contained in a case when in a car on a public road.

SENIORS TO GIVE CLASS PLAY HERE

"The Panther's Claw" Is To e Given April 26

The Senior Class of the Klemme high school have been hard at work on their class play and now have it ready for the public.

The play will be given at the high school auditorium, Friday evening, April 26th. The Seniors will present a comedy in 3 acts, "The Panther's Claw." The play has plenty of mystery and exciting moments, well seasoned with comedy throughout to keep the audience tense until the final curtain.

Reserved seats will go on sale at Wilson's drug store this week Saturday at 30 and 50 cents.

SOYBEANS ARE STILL A CRITICAL NEED

Farmers Are Guaranteed $2.04 Per Bushel for crop Grown this Year

Iowa farmers are being asked to grow nearly as many soybeans as during wartime. A revised planting goal of 1,950 thousand acres recently was for the state, and a support price of $2.04 a bushel for the 1946 crop was provided.

It's important along with maximum acreage to get high yield per acre, Iowa State College agronomists remind growers. Meeting the acreage goals with the highest possible yield will result in production of the oil needed for food industry.

Use Adapted Varieties

To get the most bushels per acre, adapted varieties should be planted early, the argonomists say. High yield also depends on the rate of planting, seedbed preparation and other cultural practices.

Lincoln soybeans are recommended for planting in southern and central Iowa. In northern Iowa the Richland is adopted to the more fertile soils. A new variety, Earlyana, also is well suited to this section.

Suggested planting dates for rowplanted beans are May 15 to 25. The last week in May is best for beans drilled solid, the agronomists say, because there is more opportunity to kill weeds before planting.

Control Weeds

Soybeans do best on a well prepared seedbed. When the crop follows corn either fall or spring plowing is satisfactory. For weed control it is recommended that the soil be disked and harrowed several times before planting. Stirring the soil helps to germite weed seeds so weeds can be killed ahead of planting, according to to the agronomists.

Weed control should be continued as soon as the beans are up, using a harrow, weeder or rotary hoe as long as possible, and then following with regular cultivations.

Need Rich Soil

The more fertile the soil the higher the yield, but except on a few sandy soils beans do not ordinarily respond to applications of commercial fertilizers. It's important to inoculate the beans, though, so they can get their own supply of nitrogen.

Rate of planting will vary with the method used. Best results will be obtained by useing a rate high enough to give a stand that will smother weeds in the row. For medium width rows a bushel per acre is about right. Solid drilled beans will require 2 bushels per acre.

MAIN ST. PAVING GIVEN SCRUBBING

Fire Dept. And Business Men Clean Street

Mayor Keraus says he is very very pleased with the result of Monday evening's call for help to sweep and clean off the pavement on Main Street when the Fire Department were out in force and were assisted with a goodly number of business men and their helpers. Mayor Keraus kept a check on the workers and said only two business places failed to assist with the work.

The pavement was scraped and swept; an estimated 5 tons of dirt and sand was hauled away. After the dirt had been removed the Fire Department gave the cement a good scrubbing with water from high pressure hoses.

All who took part in cleaning the pavement were treated by the town.

Mayor Keraus wants to thank all who helped clean the pavement and also urges residents of Klemme to contine the spring clean-up by cleaning up their own premises and the streets and alleys around their property. Help keep Klemme clean!

Should Dust Treat Streets

Now that the Main Street pavement has been taken care of, it is about time that our Town Officials did something about dust-treating the other heavily traveled streets in the town. Every year this question comes up and it is about time that the town officials should lay out a permanent program of dust control on busy streets.

The cost is not great and property owners would be willing to pay for this needed improvement.

Let's do something about dust control before the summer is too far along!

FARM BOY WINS A FIRST IN ORATION

James Gatchel, member of the local F. A. A., won first rating in a district public speaking contest at Eldora. This qualifies him to enter the state contest at Cedar Rapids Friday and Saturday this week. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Gatchel.

The parliamentary procedure team composed of Calvin Goll, Leonard Hall, Joe Kern, Clifford Greiman and Delwin Stromer, received a rating of excellent.

Goll and Greiman will attend the meeting at Cedar Rapids and Saturday as delegates from the local chapter. They will be accompanied by their instructor, Dean Nerig.

SUPT. AND MRS. KINGERY ENTERTAINED TEACHERS

Supt. and Mrs. A. L. Kingery entertained the teachers of the Klemme grade and high school at a dinner and party held in the school gymnasium Thursday evening of last week.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Kaduce, Miss Halfwassen, Miss Holmes, Major and Mrs. H. G. Voetberg, Miss Westerberg, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Leith, Miss McDaniels, William Rector, Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Harvey, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lawhorn, Mrs. Henry Jost and Mrs. Lena Schroeder.

After the dinner games were enjoyed by all.

A Touch Of Winter!

Temperatures in north Iowa dropped low enough Monday night so that there was a light freeze and a thin coat of ice covered water in exposed areas.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

State Department Blueprints International Atom Control; House Probes Spy Intrigue

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Pictured (from bottom to top) during tense UNO talk on Iran are Andrei Gromyko, representing the soviet; Sir Alexander Cadogan of Britain, and Edward Stettinius and James Byrnes of the U. S.

WORLD RELATIONS:
Atom—Russ

Even as the United Nations Organization's security council strove to compose differences with Russia over the Iranian question, the U. S. state department issued a special report calling for the creation of an international agency to control all phases of atomic energy and avert atomic rivalry among the major powers.

Written by a distinguished board of scientists and technicians the report recommended the establishment of an atomic development authority that would own and lease property and conduct mining, manufacturing, research, licensing, inspection or other operations. While the authority would possess absolute control over the production of atomic weapons, it would permit utilization of atomic energy in such civilian fields as medicine, biology, chemistry and physics.

The U. S.'s secret processes in development of atomic energy would be gradually unfolded to the United Nations authority as plans progressed for its development. Release of preliminary information necessary to discussion of setting up the agency would be followed by revelation of industrial know-how in manufacture and finally the method of constructing the A-bomb.

In releasing the report, Secretary of State Byrnes pointed out that the recommendations did not constitute official U. S. policy but could be considered as a basis for discussion of the creation of an international atomic authority.

Meanwhile, the security council worked on means to adjust the difficult situation posed by Russia's walkout in protest over UNO's consideration of Iran's complaint against the Soviets for failure to withdraw Red troops from the country. While Russia's withdrawal from the deliberations jolted UNO, the Soviets were quick to explain that their action did not mean they were withdrawing from the United Nations, but rather objecting to security council procedure.

SPY INTRIGUE:
House Acts

Hard upon the arrest of a 29-year-old Russian naval officer for espionage by the FBI in Portland, Ore., the house committee on un-American activities, headed by Representative Wood (Dem., Ga.), voted to send investigators up to Canada to probe possible connections between the Soviet spy ring uncovered in the dominion and agents in this country.

Revealing that the committee had been aware of the FBI's investigation of the Soviet naval officer, Lt. Nicolai Redin, the committee counsel said that the group soon would hold hearings on subversive activities and call on a number of witnesses, including atomic scientists and government employees.

Meanwhile, Redin, nabbed for obtaining information about the destroyer tender USS Yellowstone, charged "the whole thing is a build-up for political purposes." A member of the Soviet lend-lease purchasing staff in the U. S., Redin enjoys no diplomatic immunity and was held on $25,000 bond.

SCIENCE:
Use Germans

Some 160 German scientists are now in the United States working on military projects involving captured German equipment including rockets, buzz bombs, jet-propelled planes and aerodynamic research instruments, Secretary of War Patterson announced.

The original plan called for large scale utilization of German experts but was cut back radically following the Japanese surrender.

LABOR FRONT:
Farm Machinery Tie-Up

Government seizure of strike-bound farm machinery plants appeared as the remaining alternative as negotiations between companies and union bogged down and equipment was badly needed for the maintenance of high crop production to meet domestic and foreign demands.

As the government pondered taking over the plants, the International Harvester company continued to resist the CIO-Farm Equipment Workers' demands for union security, maintenance of membership, dues checkoff, arbitration and methods for settling grievances. Both company and union agreed to a government fact-finding recommendation for an 18-cent an hour wage increase.

In addition to 30,000 workers in 11 International Harvester plants, 12,500 employees in six plants of Allis-Chalmers and J. I. Case remained out over contract differences.

Coal Snag

While the government kept one eye on the farm machinery situation, it trained another on the coal industry, where parleys between John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers and the operators sagged over the UMW chieftain's demands for the creation of a health and welfare fund.

Dropped last year during the bargaining over a new contract, the health and welfare fund issue was raised again this year by Lewis, who gave it No. 1 position on the negotiating agenda. Asserting that it would cost them $50,000,000 annually, the operators proposed the creation of a joint committee to study an accident compensation plan as an alternative.

As a walkout in the industry loomed, the government prepared to control the shipment of an estimated 29,000,000 tons of bituminous coal above ground. Steel spokesmen said a miners' walkout might result in the restriction of production within two weeks.

New UAW Chief

A concerted drive to organize the white-collar workers in the automobile industry loomed with the election of fiery, red-haired Walter Reuther as the new CIO-United Automobile Workers president. Avowed foe of the communist faction within the UAW, Reuther thwarted the re-election hopes of R. J. Thomas, head of the union since 1938, who enjoyed leftist support.

In winning the presidency of the biggest union in the world, Reuther announced the organization of the white collar workers in the industry as one of his No. 1 goals. He also said an educational program would be undertaken to interest the membership in union activity and the UAW would strive for industry-wide instead of company-wide bargaining to correct wage and working inequalities between plants.

The stormy petrel of the UAW, and head of the union's General Motors division, Reuther is 39 and destined for major leadership in the American labor movement. Fired from the tool department of the Ford Motor company for union activity in 1933, he organized an AFL local in the plant in 1935 and then led his men into the CIO in 1938.

Children Handicapped

The American Society for the Hard of Hearing estimates that one million children, not including the totally deaf, are suffering from some form of auditory impairment.

Since a person may suffer almost a 40 per cent hearing loss before it is observable, a child may be seriously maladjusted before anything is done to help him, the authorities add.

GERMAN ASSETS:
Uncovered in Spain

Enjoying the co-operation of the Franco government, the U. S. and Britain, acting for the Allied control council, have uncovered more than 100 million dollars in German assets in Spain and taken possession as the ruling force of the vanquished reich.

Included in the assets are controlling shares in extensive holding companies; 30 ships and other facilities of three shipping companies; 100 buildings; gold worth $1,125,000; German paintings used for propaganda purposes, and a huge stock of champagne which was to be sold to obtain foreign exchange.

Discovery of stock of the Sociedad Financiero Industria in a vault under the German embassy in Madrid gave U. S. and British officials control over a far-flung holding company comprising 17 corporations. Organized at the beginning of the Spanish civil war to supply goods and munitions to Franco, the holding company was supported by the Nazis.

Among the German businesses taken over were makers of tires and rubber, medical and electrical equipment, electrical appliances, radio sets and telephones, and light bulbs. Krupp's extensive licensing of patents and processes at a 3 per cent royalty also were subject to Allied administration.

FARM EXPERIMENT:
Dropped by Ford

In line with its announced policy of abandoning activities not directly connected with the manufacture of automobiles, the Ford Motor company will dispose of 10,000 acres of farmland in Michigan originally acquired for experimenting in the adaptation of agricultural products to industrial use.

The company also decided to give up the model school project organized for the communities surrounding the huge land holdings. One-room schools were remodeled, kindergartens opened for three- and four-year-olds, and studies shaped to permit practical application of textbook teachings.

Under the new policy pushed by Henry Ford II, the company will not resume manufacture of some of its own tires and a tugboat used for Ford piers on the Detroit river has been sold. Operated by a foundation separate from the company, the Ford museum and Greenfield village will not be affected.

Found: An Honest Man!

Honesty still is the best policy to Frank Barone, 71, who has worked hard operating a shoe repair shop in Chicago, Ill., for 40 years and knows the value of money. While reheeling some footwear for an unknown customer, the cobbler discovered $1,100 in ten and twenty dollar bills stuffed deep inside the shoes. When the customer returned, Barone handed over $1,090, insisting on withholding $10 as a reward.

PEARL HARBOR:
Reopen Hearings

Pondering lengthy testimony on the Pearl Harbor disaster of December 7, 1941, the congressional committee named to investigate the catastrophe decided to reopen public hearings to obtain more detailed information from top military and naval officers as to their whereabouts on the evening preceding the attack.

Decision to call General Marshall, Admiral Stark and Rear Admiral Beardall back for questioning followed late testimony of Comdr. L. R. Schulz that President Roosevelt had sought to contact Stark on the night of December 6 after receipt of the first 13 parts of the Japanese message indicating a rupture in diplomatic relations.

While Marshall and Stark had told the committee they could not recall their whereabouts on the night of December 6, Schulz said that Mr. Roosevelt was informed that Stark was attending a theater. Beardall was said to have been dining with the late Admiral Wilkinson, chief of naval intelligence. Schulz's testimony may serve to refresh their memories, Committee Chairman Barkley said.

OUTDOOR SPORTS:
Licenses Up

America's hunters and anglers spent more than 26 million dollars for licenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. Although 8,190,901 hunting licenses and 8,280,232 fishing licenses were purchased this does not mean that 16,471,133 different sportsmen bought licenses to hunt or fish, for many bought both. There may have been even more since land-owners do not have to buy a license in some states.

German Radio Takes New Tone Under U. S.

News, Education and Swing Replace Old Nazi Line; English Grammar Lessons Prove Popular Among Listeners.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — Gradually the net is closing in about the "ether traitors," American citizens who broadcast in English from Berlin and elsewhere for the Nazis before and during the war. Recently the (in)famous "Axis Sally" was taken into custody. She devoted her air time to making G.I.s feel homesick overseas by dwelling on the joys and comforts back in the good old U. S. A. Another traitor is "Kaltenbach," an ex-Iowa boy who tried to awake nostalgia with corny realism about life down on the farm.

Then there is Constance Drexel, who pretended to be a cultured member of the old Philadelphia family whose name she used as a pseudonym when she worked on American newspapers. She was really born in Germany and brought here by her father who became naturalized. She was known here as pro-Hitler before the war. She made one broadcast for an American network when I was in Berlin but I helped to make it her last.

It is hard to prove treason. You have to have witnesses who actually saw the person in the act of broadcasting. When the Americans took over German radio our methods were far different. We used a proved weapon—the truth.

U. S. Controls Air Facilities

When active military operations changed over to occupation, the Information Control division laid down a three-point program. The plan was negative at first—the wiping out of all Nazi media, including radio, to make way for American media.

Next came actual broadcasting. The early broadcasts were very stark and stern. Decrees, regulations, warnings to the people. No concerts, no plays, no music. Now we are in phase two and the Germans are finding more variety along the radio dial. Entertainment, as well as news and education, is being provided by the ICD.

The third phase will begin when German radio stations are turned over to the Germans themselves, much as the newspapers have been allowed to operate under German direction under license. A military government official examines and criticizes the newspaper after it appears Presumably, radio programs will be supervised in roughly the same manner.

The first station to be taken over by the Americans was Radio Luxembourg. It was in pretty good shape, for the Germans had left in too much of a hurry to do any big-scale demolition.

Next station to go to work for the army was Frankfurt; then Stuttgart; then Munich. When I was in Germany, because of trouble with land lines, the Munich-Stuttgart-Frankfurt network was not running regularly. Perhaps it is now.

Radio is supported in Germany as it was before the war, by a tax on each set. Why, I asked, couldn't a radio owner conceal his set and thus get out of paying the tax? I was told there was no danger of that. If anyone concealed the fact he had a radio, his jealous neighbors would tell on him. The Nazi squealing habit is still strong in Germany.

All programs at present are in the German language, except for a few in Polish for displaced persons in camps. There is a large proportion of factual world news broadcast and an increasing number of German musical programs.

On the educational side, there are talks by German officials, and American military government men. Some jazz and swing, and lately, plays. The program periods have been running as long as 45 minutes which seems a long time for American radio fans—and now they are being extended to one hour.

Poll Reaction Of Audience

At first it wasn't easy to find out whether Germans liked what they were getting on the ICD schedule of broadcasts. Fan letters, the barometers of approval and disapproval in America, were banned up until December of last year. However, reactions are coming in now, as the ICD conducts many secret radio polls—employing the methods of polltakers in this country. The surveys which I saw indicated that, on the whole, the programs are popular with the Germans—with certain reservations.

Take factual world news, for example. Germans are anxious to hear this, but they don't always understand it. For 12 years they have been taught to be suspicious of all news. And yet, in spite of this skepticism, they are so saturated with the propaganda idea that in some cases they don't like facts.

This came out in a conference with teenagers who said they preferred the Russian broadcasts to ours. Asked why, they said there was too much propaganda in ours.

I went over this answer with one of the psychological experts. He explained it this way: straight news without comment forces the listener to think for himself. This disturbs the German teenager, and he blames the program, calling it "propaganda."

English grammar lessons far outrun American music as radio favorites in Germany. All Germans want to learn English. This desire seems to stem from the long-range hope that some day America's gates will be open, and from the opportunistic feeling that the conquered can get along better with the conqueror if they're both talking the same language.

Zionists Wary Of Russians

For years, contending European nations have battled for the friendship and support of the Arabs. This struggle was intensified when, long before World War I, the Germans started their "drang nach Osten" and the British heightened their efforts to placate the Arabs in order to protect their empire's life-lines and to prevent a spread of a disaffection to the Moslems of India.

Now Russia steps into the picture. Reports from Baghdad tell us of the spread of communistic sympathies throughout the Middle East. And the Jews of Palestine find their troubles increasing.

The announcement of Britain's granting of independence to Trans-Jordania heightened Zionist resentment, for Trans-Jordania is a part of Greater Palestine and was supposed to be included in the territory allotted to the National Jewish home.

The Zionists claim the British action is part of a scheme to prevent the United Nations from creating a trusteeship of Greater Palestine which would include Trans-Jordania, as the old League of Nations mandate did. They also make the charge that the purpose is "to thwart Jewish rights by bolstering pro-Axis forces."

The Zionists feel too that Russia is playing a similar game. They point out the inconsistency of making friends with the Arabs, whose party leader in Palestine, Jamal Husseini, is calling for the reinstatement of the Grand Mufti, a Hitler collaborator.

In his testimony before the British-American inquiry committee Husseini said: "Germany was not our enemy and therefore we had no interest in the war," adding: "I've read somewhere that it was a Jewish war."

The Zionists believe they have discovered an additional reason for Russian animosity toward their efforts in Palestine. Like most of the causes of racial and other ructions, it is fear. They say that the Soviets are afraid that if the Palestine colony becomes a success it will prove an entering wedge for western capitalism in the Near East. There is really nothing in common between the feudalist, unprogressive Arab world and the economic and social principles represented by the Soviet system. The Arabs can't do the Soviets any harm but they could be used, the Zionists say, to hamstring what might become a live and up-and-coming Jewish nation imbued with capitalistic ideas, operating too close for communistic comfort.

An Innocent Bystander:

The conflicting stories from Iran recall a quip that was popular with overseas newsboys during the war: It concerns the Ministry of Information carrier pigeon, leisurely flying to its destination, when it was jostled by a second pigeon that shouted: "Get a move on. I've got the denial!"

A N. Y. editorial writer stated that Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. cannot hope to be President because he was born in Canada and a Chief-Exec must be a native-born American.

Overwhelming weight of legal opinion: Anyone who is born of American parents in a foreign country and properly registered can be President. . . . Ho, hum. Any other questions?

Another reason for our tense relations with Russia is that the Americans Russia respected (and trusted most) can no longer help us Iran out differences: FDR, Harry Hopkins and Wendell Willkie.

It happened at the Brooklyn income tax bureau recently. . . . Two men named Thomas McNally and Joseph Sweeney were having their tax forms filled out by an agent when they suddenly began speaking to each other in Yiddish. . . . Questioned by the startled income tax agent—McNally and Sweeney explained they were Dublin-born Jews.

Talk about blazing red faces: A few days after Lord Halifax publicly opined that Goering was anxious to prevent war—Goering testified (at the war crimes trial) and took every opportunity to praise Hitler—the Nazi system—and everything the Nazis did.

A quip causing tee-hees in some of the back rooms in Argentina concerns the recent incident when Mrs. Peron turned up at a social soiree. . . . During the evening one of the guests turned to his neighbor and remarked: "Well, there sits Argentina's First Lady."

"That's no lady," was the retort. "That's his wife!"

The State Dep't has been shoved around like a revolving door. But now it has been complimented—the Rankin Committee plans to probe the SD. . . . Rankin's witch-hunting spree recalls the time a Dies Committee member (Cong. J. Parnell Thomas) ranted that the WPA theater was a "hot-bed of communism" and demanded the investigation of a play titled "Prologue to Glory."

The play concerned an American named Abe Lincoln.

Quotation Marksmanship: John W. Raper: A man picks a wife the same way an apple picks a farmer. . . . D. Yates: Bold as the bark of a puppy. . . . Voltaire: The ear is the road to the heart. . . . Muriel Gaines: His wrinkles are overloaded with decisions. . . . Singapore Sal: The only difference among women is their faces. . . . James Kelly: She walked as though she were carrying a chip on her hip. . . . Nancy Donovan: An actor, full of hambition. . . . Chinese Proverb: The broadminded see the truth in different religions; the narrow-minded see only their differences. . . . Seaman Jacobs' opinion of a guy with no initiative: He's always in there catching. . . . Wm. Schiller: Our friendship with Russia seems to be strictly platomic. . . . Eileen Deneen: War do we go from here?

Sallies in Our Alley: A Broadway showman walked up to a newcomer-lovely last night and asked: "Want to work in my night club as a showgirl?" . . . To which her companion (agent Paul Small) said: "I offered her a receptionist's job only today at $25 a week and she laughed at me." . . . The showman indignantly rejoined: "You're not offering people $25 a week these days?" . . . "Who are you to talk?" barked the agent. "You'd offer it to a star!" . . . Ozzie Nelson says when a show's a success the producer knocks wood. When it isn't, he knocks critics.

Midtown Vignette: At the Bernard Baruch dinner for Mr. Churchill, Cardinal Spellman was also an honored guest. . . . Baruch is a tall man — Churchill is a shorty — and they were having quite a time of it with the microphone. . . . Until, that is, a volunteer got up to help. . . . The mike-adjuster (raising it high or low) was the Cardinal.

Years ago when a double-talking official told newsmen, "I never said that!" (although a dozen reporters knew that he had), one editor ridiculed him by sending him the following note:

"Sir: You may recollect we printed yesterday your denial of having retracted the contradiction of your original statement. Would you care to have us say that you were misquoted in regard to it?"

Units' Locations a Secret

The war department has announced that as of March 19 no further information will be furnished as to the whereabouts of various units in the armed forces as they have done during the past several months. The army explains that during the period of redeployment when so many units were moving in transit from one sector to another they permitted publication of the positions of these units.

At this time, however, the army says that the billets of the various units are more or less semi-permanent and that again, for reasons of military security, their positions will not be publicized.

So please do not ask us to obtain this information as we have done in the past.

Questions and Answers

Q. When I was shipped to the states for discharge, I was told to leave my foot locker with my battalion supply officer and he would have it shipped to my home. I did and I have been home six months and no foot locker. Whom can I write to in a case like this?—J. M. E., Seattle, Wash.

A. Write to Personal Effects division, U. S. quartermaster corps, U. S. army, Kansas City, Mo.

Q. My brother enlisted in May, 1944, for the ASTP. He went to college for eight months, then was transferred to the infantry. Will his time in ASTP count as time in service? Is he considered a volunteer? —L. G., Chicago, Ill.

A. If he was on active duty during his ASTP service, his time counts. If he was in the enlisted reserve status, his time does not count. The army says all men of draft age are considered inductees.

Q. My son, a private first class, is now in a hospital from wounds received in Italy. In a big push, his sergeant and corporal were killed. He was placed in command and led his squad for five days when he was wounded. Should he not receive a sergeant's pay from that time on? — Reader, Boonville, N. Y.

A. Not unless he was promoted to a sergeant.

Q. I entered the army in December, 1945. My father had an accident, my mother was sick and unable to care for him, no one at home, so I was discharged from the army to care for them and run the farm he rented. I lacked a few days of staying in three months. Am I entitled to any of the bill of rights? — A worried farmer, Danielsville, Ga.

A. The law says you must have served at least 90 days on active duty unless discharged for disability prior to that time. You evidently were released at your convenience on a hardship case and therefore the veterans administration says you are not entitled to the benefits.

Q. My son is a second lieutenant and entered the service January 6, 1945, went overseas December 21, 1945. How long before he can be discharged?—Mrs. F. A. W., Dubuque, Iowa.

A. Critical point score for a second lieutenant is 67 points or 45 months. As of September 2, your son would have about 8 points and 8 months.

Q. I have been receiving servicemen's readjustment allowance for 10 months on self-employment as owner and part-operator of a business. Am waiting on appeal of service - connected disability. Will the readjustment allowance be stopped after one year or one year plus time in service or until results of my disability appeal are received? — C. D. VD., Alva, Okla.

A. The law says 52 weeks is the maximum for drawing servicemen's readjustment allowance.

Q. Can a former wife receive alimony from a retired army man through the U. S. treasury if she has a court decree stating it be paid in this manner each month? —Reader, Chattanooga, Tenn.

A. That is purely a legal question. Consult your attorney.

Q. My husband was retired with a pension from the regular army after 30 years of service. Can I claim any support for my child and myself from his pension? — Mrs. L. B., Philadelphia, Pa.

A. This is a legal question and must be settled in the courts.

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

Feeder Barn

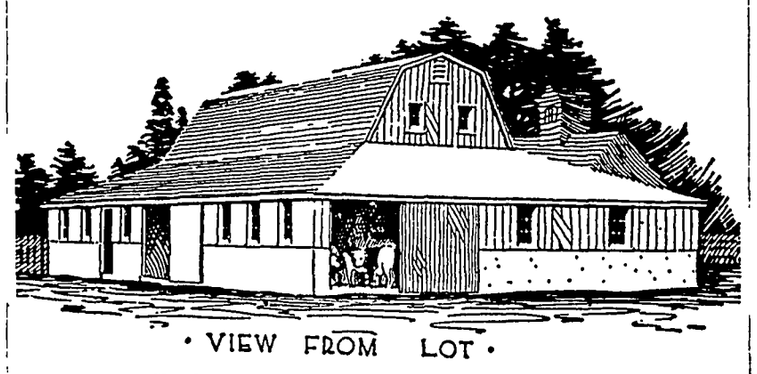
By W. J. DRYDEN, WNU Farm Editor.

This combined storage and livestock or feeder barn was developed by the University of Illinois. It will prove satisfactory for general purpose use on farms where stock cattle or feeder cattle are kept.

This type of barn includes room for work animals and milk cows, but the space is adaptable in that the entire shedded portion can be used for cattle, or one side may be equipped with stalls for dairy cows.

The roofs will last longer if the ridge runs north and south than those which have one side exposed to the north slope. The hay door, if possible, should be in the north end.

If horses are to be kept in the barn, the ceiling height should be at least nine feet, otherwise eight feet will be sufficient. Care should be exercised in planning barns so that girders will not decrease the head room over horse stalls.

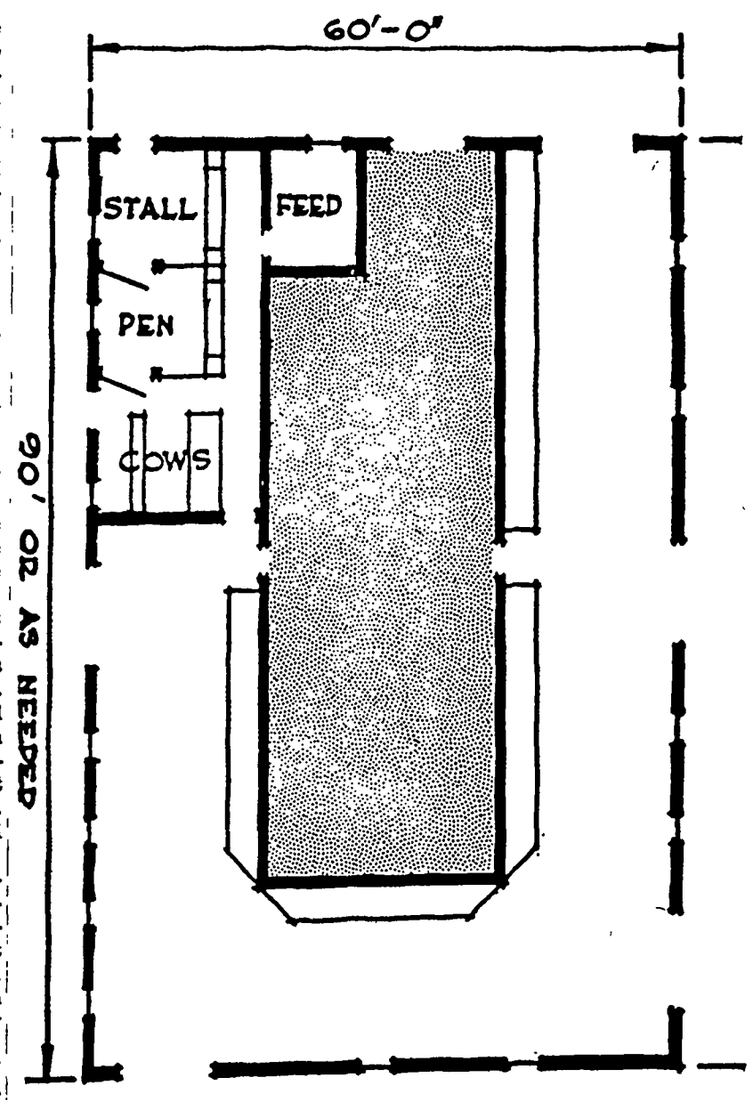


Feeder Barn Suitable for General Conditions.

The central storage part is suitable for long hay, chopped or baled hay or bedding. The usual plan has a 24-foot hay space and 18-foot sheds. The length is variable, depending upon the number to be fed. The roof may be gable, gambrel or arched. The material may be of any type that is economically available. If it is also to be used as a dairy barn, then local milk inspection regulations must be complied with. In such case it is likely advisable to have concrete floor, at least on the dairy side.

The roof may be of any quality material available locally. It may be of galvanized, wood shingles, composition shingles, roofing paper or slate. The quality obtainable as well as local price should determine the type used.

In planning windows there are two systems to follow. Either provided four square feet of glass area per 1,000 pounds live weight, or one square foot of glass area for each 20 square feet of floor space. The windows should be hinged at the bottom to swing in. Metal guards should be used on both sides of the window to check swing, allow ventilation and retard drafts. The windows should be about four feet above the floor.



Plenty of Floor Space Is Provided in This Barn.

WAR NOT EXPECTED

WASHINGTON. — That the Truman cabinet is not looking for war in the near future, despite warlike talk, was indicated at a secret session of the senate military affairs committee recently.

When Secretary of State Byrnes and Secretary of War Patterson testified in favor of an extension of the selective service act, the figures they presented on planned strength of the army and navy were exactly the same as those presented early in January. In other words, they proposed an army of barely over a million men by July of 1947.

The senators had expected that because of the complicated international situation a larger army would be asked for, but the war and state departments made no such request. When one senator asked how it happened that there was no "emergency" planning, Secretary Byrnes refused to answer. He passed the question to Secretary Patterson, who also did not reply.

WALLACE SPEECH CENSORED.

It wasn't supposed to be known outside the cabinet, but Henry Wallace's speech at the Jackson Day dinner was censored — by President Truman himself. Wallace had one line in his speech which he thought would answer Republican critics. It read:

"Abraham Lincoln was not a member of our party. But he was certainly a fellow traveler."

Truman thought such a reference to the martyred Lincoln might be misunderstood and cut it out. Wallace was glad to concur.

MEN'S SUITS

It still looks like a long wait before veterans can get the clothing they need. The office of war mobilization and reconversion will soon bring out a report on men's clothing showing a need for 40 million suits this year but production plans for only about 28 million.

The report will also show that first quarter production has been only about 5 million, and officials of the civilian production administration are worried sick that even the goal of 28 million suits for 1946 will not be met.

There is no sign yet that the increase in prices granted this month by OPA will mean more men's suits. There are indications, however, that large stocks of suits are being held off the market in the hope that price control will not be extended beyond June.

For years John L. Lewis has been one of labor's top negotiators. Usually he has his facts cold. Recently, however, while arguing safety precautions with Harry Moses, an important Pittsburgh mine operator, he said:

"Why, Harry, your father is a good illustration of why we need these safeguards. Everybody knows him as a veteran coal man, and we've all seen him limping around for 50 years because of a mine accident. So how can you sit there and deny us the safeguards to prevent the same sort of thing from happening to other miners?"

"John," replied Moses, "I don't know where you got your information about my father—but it wasn't so good. I'll tell you how he hurt his leg. It wasn't in a coal mine, it was playing baseball. He broke his leg sliding into second."

NOTE — Bureau of mine officials heartily endorse Lewis' demands for better safety precautions in the mines.

DIPLOMATIC VICTORY

During the heyday of the Roosevelt administration, Vice Pres. Jack Garner gave a dinner for the late Will Rogers at which the cowboy humorist, commenting on a forthcoming international conference, said:

"This country has won every war, but lost every conference."

Recently, however, one international conference closed at Savannah, Ga., at which the United States won every single round. It was the first world monetary conference, and the man responsible for the American victory was hard-hitting Fred Vinson, secretary of the treasury.

His chief battle was over the location of the international bank and the stabilization fund to be established under the Bretton Woods plan. The British wanted the bank and fund located in New York, but Secretary Vinson wanted them in Washington. When the vote was taken, there was only one vote against Washington — Lord Keynes' vote.

Million Pieces of Glass in Stage Curtain of 27 Tons

The most magnificent stage curtain on record, a mosaic of glass, has hung in the National theater in Mexico City since 1911. Depicting a popular Mexican legend, the curtain has an area of 280 square yards and contains nearly 1,000,000 pieces of colored glass; and its construction required the work of 20 men for 15 months in the Tiffany studios in New York.

Although weighing 27 tons, it is raised or lowered by hydraulic pressure in seven seconds.

Stellers' Sea Cow

No species of animal was ever exterminated so quickly by man as Steller's sea cow, a 25-foot, three-ton aquatic mammal, thousands of which were seen near the Asiatic coast of the Bering sea when this body of water was discovered by Bering in 1741, says Collier's.

The trading and sealing vessels which followed in the wake of his expedition killed so many of these sea cows for food that they were extinct within 27 years.

GARDEN TALKS

Home gardeners are going to be asked to an all-out gardening job this year to meet a need as great as that of the war years. Wartime demands have been replaced by the peacetime problem of feeding starving Europe.

Home gardens will play a big part in this job. They'll furnish food for the table both in fresh and preserved form. This will enable commercial food processors to divert more of their products for overseas relief.

Garden and conserve will be the watch word. But the city garden planter will find the job more difficult than in war years. Many of the war garden plots have been sold for building sites, making more difficult the problem of finding garden space.

Now that gas rationing is no longer a problem, individual or community gardens on the outskirts of towns are a possible answer. Farm gardens will continue on the same basis, being a part of farm living.

Making several small plantings of radishes and lettuce at about 2-week intervals up to the middle of May will stretch the edible supply over a longer period of time without the usual waste.

Asparagus, rhubarb, beets, broccoli, cabbage, carrots, kohlrabi, onions, parsnips, peas and chard all should be planted by now. But planting of warm-weather crops, should be delayed until May. The Iowa Garden Guide is a handy reference for planting dates. If you haven't one, they're available free from your county extension director or the Iowa College Agricultural Extension Service at Ames.

Where beets and carrots are desired only for table use during the season, very small spring plantings should be made. Large plantings for fresh storage over winter should be delayed until the last of June. But parsnips and vegetable oyster plantings for winter storage should be made by now. Spring plantings of turnips are not ordinarily as satisfactory as late summer plantings. Incidentally, Iowa climate is not well adapted to rutabagas.

The time is ripe to sow seed of Marglobe and other rust-resistant tomatoes in the garden. For small gardens about 8 seeds per hill are recommended. Hills should be spaced about 2 feet apart. Treating seed with one of the avaible protectant dusts is advised. And hills should be marked because the seed germinates slowly.

Cabbage and broccoli plantings may be made now. Many gardeners also set out cauliflower, Brussels sprouts and head lettuce at this time. But these plants are not too dependable for our climate even in normal years.

It is wise to protect newly set plants from the sun and wind for a short time until the plants "take ahold." A strong start also is assured by applying a cupful of liquid fertilizer at the time of transplanting. To obtain a good liquid fertilizer, dissolve 3 tablespoons of a complete chemical garden fertlizer in 1 gallon of water. Let the mixture stand several hours before using.

Not Comfortable Place

The Levi Jensen family of near Griswold look twice before they take a step anymore. One day, Mrs. Jensen found a small snake crawling about the kitchen floor. None of the people around Griswold who saw the snake could remember having seen one like it. Previously, a package of fresh fruit had been received from California and the snake might have been in it. Another, apparently, the mate of the first one was also seen in the Jensen home, both were killed.

Ground Squirrels Are Menance To Crops

The ground squirrels, both the striped and gray species, are responsible for most of the corn damage attributed to pheasants in Iowa, and their control early in the season is urged by the Conservation Commision. Because of the fact that pheasants are easily seen and the squirrels are not, when damage accurs most often the pheasant is given the blame, whereas examination of the stomachs af both reveals that the rodents are the seed corn eaters and the pheasants are dinning on wireworms, cutworms, and other miscellaneous insect pests.

The most effective ground squirrel control method is poising. Poisoned wheat or corn should, early in the season, be dropped into the squrrels holes bordering cultivated fields. It is important that the poison kernels are well down in the ground so that valuable seed-eating birds are not endangered. Another popular method of control of ground squirrels is by shooting with .22 caliber rifels. While less effective for the most part than poisoning, shooting has certain appeal, particularly to city marksmen. Anyone shooting squirrels on land other than their own must first secure permission from the land owner.

DECREASE HEAT FOR OLDER BABY CHICKS

One of the tests of a good poultry raiser is the care and attention he gives his chicks after they are a month old, county director, Paul Henderson, said this week.

By the time chicks are a month old, the pressure of other farm work often results in neglect of the young birds. There's a tendency to feel they can shift for themselves.

One of the most important considerations, Henderson savs, is to decrease the heat as the chicks grow. One hundred chicks a month old generate a lot of heat. Slot ventilators and windows should be adjusted to keep temperature uniform.

Many successful producers in the country make use of the sunporch attachment on the brooder house. This allows the chicks to be out in the sunshine but at the same time keeps them away from disease infested yards and lots.

Month-old chicks also need roosts. Early roosting lessens the danger of crowding.

Each stem was enserted in a test tube of water, with a rubber washer fitting closely around the stem.

Not April Fool

Ex-Mayor Perkins, of Leon, thought he had was being handed an old April fool joke when two gifts, beautifully wrapped, were left at the city hall for him. On April 2, he opened the packages. The City Council had given Perkins a Reynolds pen and the city employees gave him a leather billfold.

Where, Oh Where?

One evening, W. C. Collins, LeMars, reported his car had been stolen. The police started a search. The next morning, the car was found in its own garage, but so far none of those interested know where it had been the previous evening.

Gall Bladder Disease Is Common Condition

Gall bladder disease is a relatively common condition brought on by bad dietary habits, inadequate rest and the slighting of health rules in general, according to Elihu Katz M D. of New York Writing in the January issue of Hygeia magazine, Dr Katz said that in order to prevent gall bladder disease "all general health rules must be observed."

The gall bladder is a small muscular sac under and between the two lobes of the liver Its chief functions are the collection, storage and concentration of bile brought it from the liver This bile it releases when the stomach contents pass into the small intestine Gall bladder disease is a chronic inflammation and disturbed function of the gall bladder, in which stones may or may not be present.

Dr. Katz wrote that "one of the outstanding symptoms of gall bladder disease is colic or pain. Gall bladder pain, due to severe contractions of the inflamed organ while attempting to empty its contents, is usually felt in the upper right part of the abdomen over the gall bladder area. Occasionally it may be felt in the pit of the stomach or over the entire abdomen, on the right side of the back, the right shoulder or arm, and it may even be located in the chest and resemble a heart pain. The intensity of the pain varies from a dull ache to a severe colic. As a rule, eating increases the pain because food in the small intestine causes contractions of the inflamed organ."

Rikshas Make Way for Modern Transportation

Jinrikishas are on their way out of the street scene in Shanghai. In order to increase manpower in other fields, the city's transportation authorities have approved a three-year plan which will completely eliminate the familiar riksha as a public conveyance.

Shanghai, China's most important commercial center, was the scene of a riksha graft investigation in 1934. It was found that riksha boys cleared only $3 a month, paying nearly half their daily earnings to the company from which they rented their rikshas None of the carriages was coo owned.

An individual coolie could work only about 16 shifts a month, as competition for the rikshas was great and there were not enough to supply the demand. This meant enforced idleness for many. From 70,000 rikshas in Shanghai the companies made large annual profits. With the advent of streetcars, automobiles and bicycles, rikshas were the cause of frequent traffic snarls.

Study Rotation

Engineers with the aid of a newly developed instrument — the Rotascope—now are able to make any rotating object appear motionless before their eyes. The blade of an electric fan, or an airplane propeller, will appear to stand still, even though they're whirling at full speed, when the "optical engineer" is focused upon them. Developed for the study of airplane propellers under actual operating conditions, the rotascope is the first instrument of its kind which allows the continuous viewing of a rotating object at any point on the perimeter (or path of travel). The new device is an answer to the scientific problem for an optical system capable of untwisting the light of rotating equipment before it is recorded by the human eye. It eliminates the rotary component of motion, but shows any flutter or vibration of the moving part, thereby making it possible for scientists and engineers to make a thorough study of the rotating parts of machinery, Mr. Barnes explained.

Chicken Feathers

No one thought of using chicken feathers for cloth until a simple and cheap way of preserving them was developed by the department of agriculture. The fine elements of the feathers are twisted into a lightweight, furry thread that can be woven into soft sweaters, fluffy mittens, scarfs and belts. Full 100 per cent chicken feather cloth is not durable enough for some purposes. But scientists have found that by making a 50-50 combination of chicken feathers and wool they can produce a fabric that will wear better and is warmer than wool. Decorative effects are achieved by mixing feathers with rayon, wool, cotton, nylon, fortisan, and other fibers. Even the quills of the feathers can be made into a cloth that is very much like silk, although far more elastic.

Whipping Cream

The whipping quality of cream depends on its age and its "richness" or butterfat content. Freshly separated cream does not whip well. It needs to stand and chill at least four hours. The whipping quality improves if it stands 24 hours. Cream sold by dairies for whipping will have sufficient aging when delivered. If cream is to be kept after whipping, keep it in the coldest part of the refrigerator. How much cream to whip at a time depends on the size of the whipper. The usual small household beater does the best job with no more than a pint of cream. If larger quantities are to be whipped, time will be saved by whipping in successive batches.

Bath towel size is purely a matter of personal preference. However, remember that some bath towels shrink as much as 14 percent in the first five washings a sizeable shrink. Use will determine size; small towels are easiest managed by children and simplest to wash.

Useful Machine

John Lunstrum, Britt has a new use for a popcorn machine. One day recently, he brought his new son home from the hospital. The youngster "cried and cried" until Johnnie fixed up an extra warm sleeping place for him. Lunstrum warmed the popcorn machine up to a temperature of about 80 degrees, placed baby in it and immediately no more crying was heard.

Better Variety of Cotton Assures Mill Demand

In 2,500 communities, farmers have joined hands to grow one-variety cotton, the department of agriculture saying the plan has paid off. For example, in Georgia and Alabama where the one-variety program has been in use for about 10 years, the extra income has ranged from $6 to $11 per acre each year.

Cotton breeders at the state experiment stations in the cotton belt, and scientists with the department of agriculture have developed varieties of cotton that meet the spinning-demands of the cottonmill industry Tests were run to determine fiber strength. X-ray machines, microscopes, stretching devices, spindles—all were put to work to find out what kind of cotton was needed.

The result has been that dependable cotton fiber is being grown on about one-third of all the cotton acreage in this country. What's more, this one-variety plan has improved cotton's place in the whole fiber picture. When mills can buy large lots of uniform staple cotton —15 to 20 per cent stronger than mixed variety lots—American cotton farmers will have gone a long way in meeting competition from fibers that may be imported from other countries or manufactured synthetically here at home.

Warriors Carried Faith Of Islam to China

Mohammedans in China, says the National Geographic society, can be traced as far back as the eighth century to the use of Turkish mercenaries by the Chinese emperor. Many of these troops of the Mohammedan faith settled in China, married Chinese wives and brought up their children in their own belief. Conquests of the Mongol emperors, notably Genghis Khan and Kublai Khan, beginning in the 13th century, brought new groups of Mohammedans attracted by religious freedom. Some of these newcomers were soldiers in the hire of Genghis Khan. He used them as manpower insurance against Chinese alliances which might threaten his power.

Sizable numbers of Mohammedans were attached to the retinues of Turkistan princesses who married Chinese emperors. Retainers who took root in China helped to increase the Mohammedan colonies. Mohammedan traders from other lands who penetrated deeply into China at times found return to their home lands was made so difficult because of political disturbances or the condition of routes that they became permanent residents.

At one time Chinese children were sold to Mohammedans by needy parents. These children were taken into the faith and reared as Mohammedans.

Mistletoe Center

Ninety per cent of the mistletoe on Christmas markets comes from Oklahoma where this green grows abundantly, and where many rural people make a part time business of gathering and shipping it each year, according to the United States forest service. The dense bunches of mistletoe, from one to three feet across, grow as a parasite on trees, mostly in the South. The bunches are broken off, packed in barrels with moss to hold moisture, and shipped to market, usually by freight. Mistletoe keeps well in shipping because its leathery leaves and waxy berries do not dry out easily. In Texas where mistletoe grows widely on mesquite, it often serves a utilitarian purpose at this time of year. When food is scarce on winter ranges, the ranchers pole down bunches of it to feed cattle. Texas mistletoe also goes to local markets at Christmas time.

Arctic Outpost

Since 1922 the Canadian government has maintained outposts in the Arctic region and along Hudson bay. To facilitate navigation an accurate survey of Hudson strait has been made. Tides and currents have been charted and direction-finding stations have been established. There is wireless communication from three bases—Port Burwell, at the Atlantic entrance; Wakeham bay, halfway through the strait; and Nottingham island, at the entrance to Hudson bay. Ocean-going steamers can traverse the bay, as the depth averages more than 400 feet. Shores of the bay are settled sparsely by Indians and Eskimos. There are no white settlements on the east coast. Missionaries have gained Canada's gratitude because of their success in educating and maintaining the health of the natives.

Rugged Country

Most of Nicaragua's one million population live along the mountainous Pacific coast where the elevation and lakes afford some relief from the tropical temperatures. Through this section passes the Pan American highway; both railway and highway systems are largely confined to the western half of the country. Nicaragua's west coast, extending 160 miles in a southeasterly direction, is backed by volcanic peaks and mountain ranges, with many hills crowding the shore and presenting steep cliffs to the pounding surf. Volcano Viejo is only 16 miles inland; and Volcano Ometepe rising from Lake Nicaragua, is 23 miles inland. They are two of Nicaragua's tallest peaks.

Campaign Against Cattle TB Solves Beef Tonnage

When the campaign to clear cattle tuberculosis from the farms of this country started 25 years ago, most emphasis was placed on providing a safe milk supply, reports the department of agriculture. Now, it appears the fight against cattle tuberculosis has not only protected the milk supply, but has saved a vast amount of beef as well.

Today, this savings in beef runs at a rate of nearly 40,000 head of cattle or about 16,000,000 pounds of beef a year, the department officials estimate. Of about 14,500,000 cattle carcasses federally inspected during the last fiscal year, less than 1 out of 10,000 was seriously affected with cattle tuberculosis. Twenty-five years ago, they report, 30 times as many carcasses were condemned for tuberculosis.

Though remarkable progress has been made in freeing the cattle herds of this country of tuberculosis, some unsuspected centers of infection turn up continually. Meat inspection and livestock shipping records help in tracing tuberculosis cattle to their home premises and clearing out the infection. Department officials urge retesting herds from time to time to detect any new herd infection early, and hasten the complete eradication of cattle tuberculosis.

Need for Quality Exports Shaped Swiss Watches

From the Middle ages on Swiss have made tower clocks for their churches and town halls, and adorned them with ingenious carvings. A parade of toy bears marks the striking of each hour on an old tower clock at Bern; and from the German Baren, meaning bears, the city is said to take its name.

From early town-clock building came a gradual evolution toward smaller and smaller clocks. From generations of devising mechanisms for puppets, clocks and toys came the finger skill that made the Jura Swiss able watchmakers. From their unproductive environment and limited domestic market grew the necessity for importing raw materials to manufacture goods of concentrated value that would sell on merit in foreign markets despite stiff tariff barriers.

Watchmaking as an infant industry had "arrived" at Geneva and Neuchatel before 1700. It gradually extended through the Jura to Bern, Le Locle and La Chaux-de-Fonds—all towns where it has grown big in the past hundred years.

Streamlined for Desert

A picturesque part of the desert scene, the camel's body was equipped for travel over the sand, long before streamlining was heard of. A camel's foot acts on sand as a shoeshow does on snow. Although the camel may be supporting a great weight, it will not sink. The beast's eyelashes are especially long and its wide nostrils can be narrowed to slits in order to keep out the sand. Chest and knees are padded with leathery calluses affording protection from sand abrasions. Sight and smell are acute, and camels can endure from six to ten days without water. One camel can carry as much as half a ton 25 miles a day. Wherever the camel is bred it becomes a medium of exchange, constituting its master's wealth. Camel milk is drunk by humans and animals alike. When the camel is slaughtered, rope, robes and tents are made from its hair; water bottles, shoes and boots are fashioned from the skin. Camel meat is considered a delicacy, while the hump supplies fat for eating and cooking.

Tough Plastic

A new plastic is currently being used by some manufacturers to form a protective covering and prevent scratches, marks or corrosion on such materials as steel, aluminum and magnesium. It is a cold-pour material which can be applied like lacquer by spraying, brushing or dipping. It dries at room temperature in approximately 20 minutes, leaving a film that is extremely tough and durable. Metals covered with the substance can be bent into numerous shapes without disturbing the film; yet the film can be easily peeled off with the fingernails, the same way cellophane can be peeled from a package of cigarettes. The film is normally transparent; however, it can be dyed to produce any color. Its rugged, nonporous composition enables it to prevent scratches, mars and corrosion; and if necessary, it can be cured with heat so that it cannot be peeled from the base material.

Huge Grant

It was not until "gentlemen adventurers" of the Hudson's Bay company obtained their charter in 1670 that fur trading became a thriving business. Having discovered one source of riches, the company little knew what tremendous power their charter gave them — "the whole trade of all those seas, straits and bays, lakes, rivers, creeks and sounds together with all the lands, countries and territories upon the coasts and confines of the aforesaid." Charles II of England had no way of knowing how vast was this uncharted territory—30 rivers, all the northwest territories, most of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Alberta — almost a third of Canada.

Expect 'Carbon 13' to Rank With X-Rays

Research Promises Medical Science New Tool.

PHILADELPHIA — Expanded production of Carbon 13, which recent experiments in biochemical research indicate "gives promise of ranking in importance with x-ray as a tool of medical science," was announced here recently by Sun Oil company and Houdry Process corporation.

The isotope, so rare that current production has been at the rate of less than one-half ounce a year, "may be compared to a chemical microscope that makes it possible for the chemist to see and follow chemical reactions in the body not possible with the x-ray."

Carbon 13 has been described as appearing like an ordinary carbon It can be used to produce any of the compounds normally composed of carbon, such as sugar, alcohol, the hydrocarbons of gasoline and thousands of others.

Or, the statement continued, Carbon 13 can be used to grow vegetables which have some or all carbon atoms with atomic mass equaling 13.

These compounds and vegetables, injected into or eaten by living organisms, including humans, contain the necessary "tracers" by which their effect on body functions can be discovered.

Research with the isotope, the companies said, already has led to discovery of how fats are broken down in the animal organism to create energy necessary to carry on the life process.

"The possibilities of research with Carbon 13 are almost beyond imagination," the statement said. "It is a new and powerful tool for a revolutionary approach to studies of the fundamental processes that occur in all living things, as well as metabolic disease processes such as cancer, diabetes, hardening of the arteries, so-called 'heart trouble' and others."

The companies announced plans for construction, by Sun Oil, of two plants to produce "comparatively substantial quantities of Carbon 13."

Loud-Speaking Radio Stilled; Owner Jailed

LOS ANGELES. — Mrs. Lucille Wiseman, 43, began 60 radioless days in jail for violating probation granted when she was convicted a year ago of playing her radio so loud her neighbors' dishes "jumped" on their shelves.

The dishes were still jumping to the beat of hillbilly music, the neighbors told Judge C. Newell Carns, who revoked Mrs. Wiseman's probation.

The noise has grown louder instead of softer since Mrs. Wiseman was fined $25 last December, the neighbors said.

Increased use of farm machines is not the fundamental cause of the increasing size of Iowa farms, in the opinion of Earl Heady, Iowa State College farm economist. He has been making a study of the cause of increase in farm size.

With supplies of feed grain and supplements short, it is more essential than usual this year to grow pasture for hogs.

A good mixture to use in building up bluegrass pastures that are worked over is 5 lbs. sweetclover, 3 pounds red clover, 2 pounds alsike. In southern Iowa 10 pounds of Korean lespedeza may be added.

Plant garden seed generally about four or five times as deep as the diameter of the seed, Iowa State College horticulturists suggest.

Swank and the Ball Parks

"Get me a table up front at the ball game!" . . . "How's about a reservation for six at the double-header. And will you put on four quarts of champagne! . . . Never mind who's pitching; what I wanna know is who's in the floor show!"

These may be routine cracks in American big league ball parks this season. Two private club rooms with bars and 400 boxes to which members only will be permitted will be a feature of the games at Yankee Stadium.

The boxes and club rooms will be open to members paying from $600 to $900 a season, and most of the memberships have already been grabbed by bankers, brokers, business men, theatrical men, etc.

Thus, will exclusiveness, social distinctions be introduced to that stronghold of democracy, the American national game of baseball. Down through baseball history the millionaire has rubbed elbows with the street cleaner at the ball parks. "Take your coat off, let your hair down, relax and be one of the gang!" has been the traditional cry.

All men may not have been positive they were equal but at the ball game they felt closer to it than anywhere else.

And now—of all places—the baseball park is to find class consciousness, the upper and lower levels of society, financial distinction and a touch of the night club and country club flavor. One club room will be modernistic with chromium fixtures and red leather chairs; the other will carry the mood of an old English inn of the Heathcliff-on-Finchely-Finchely type. The bar and restaurant will be a deluxer.

Bleacher fans arise!

We demand that the bottle of beer, the pop bottle, the frankfurter and the cause of democracy remain intact at American baseball parks, never to give way to the breast of chicken under glass, the magnum of vintage wine, cafe society, the gossip columns and special privileges for the bourbons!

The beer shortage may be so serious this summer that we will be applying for a priority to get a small glass of suds. But we can stand anything up to the point where, in order to get a schooner of beer, we are compelled, through a tie-in sale, to buy a crate of sweet cider.

A rich New York landlord and real estate speculator who worked the old game of charging a war veteran several thousand dollars for a few bits of cheap furniture in order to get a small apartment, got ten days in jail and a fine of $100 the other day. Our idea, if that is the maximum penalty, would be to make the landlord come across with at least $5,000 for the chair in his cell.

A. A. Milne says that years of war have hardened the British so that they "are now immune from the scourge of victory."

It seems more and more apparent that what UNO needs more than anything else are bumpers front and rear and a bullet-proof windshield.

VANISHING AMERICANISMS

"Bock Beer, Five Cents."

"Here's a quarter. Go get a quart of ice cream."

"I don't make a lot of money but I can get all I need and have some fun."

"Let's buy him two new suits for Easter."

HERE AND THERE

They say General Marshall, back from China, took one look at the American scene and exclaimed, "And I thought it hard to understand Chinese!" . . . Are-We-Gonna-Get-Inflation Item: the $3.50 filet mignon without vegetables. . . . Bakery inquiry, now that the size of the loaf of bread has been cut, "Do you want the small loaf or the invisible one?"

Winston Churchill, getting still another degree, must wish he could repeat his famous line, "This may not be the beginning of the end, but it is the end of the beginning."

Shopper's Lament

The shop windows bulge with the loveliest things;
A feast for the greediest eyes!
It seems to hurt more with rare objects galore
To find that they don't have your size.

REMEMBER—

When a woman's complaint "He spends his weeks salary on liquor" implied that he got more than two drinks?

Back when it wasn't necessary to begin each day by checking to see how far away the nearest war was?

Buried Loot

The salt mines in which Germans hid looted treasures during the war were better hiding places than copper mines because mold formed on treasures hidden in the copper mines, while treasures in salt mines remained dry since salt absorbs moisture.

How to Fight the Menace of FIRE

A Wet Towel and a Flashlight may save your life!—says the National Safety Council

1 Call the fire department at first opportunity! Fire is always dangerous—especially at night. Most fires do occur at night! If you smell smoke, reach for your "Eveready" flashlight. Feel doors before opening them. If door is hot, don't open it.

2 Wet a towel or cloth; cover your face and arms. Close doors behind you to reduce drafts that may fan the flames. If the heat is severe, remember that heat rises—crawl! If trapped on an upper floor, make a rope of bedclothes. As a last resort only, throw out a mattress and jump down onto it.

3 To avoid danger, you have to see it—so keep your flashlight with you until you're safe! Watch for collapsing ceilings... the best way to avoid fire is to prevent it! Your flashlight gives a much better light than matches or a candle, and it's much safer to use.

4 To help prevent fire or fight it—or for any flashlight need—rely on "Eveready" Batteries. Ask your dealer for them by name. The days when you had to accept "second choice" batteries—or none—are past. "Eveready" Batteries have no equal—that's why they're the biggest-selling flashlight batteries in the world!

MOTTO:
National Union and State Sovereignty

From 1800 to 1809, however, the state we know as Illinois was a part of Indiana territory! It was then organized as the territory of Illinois, the seat of government being at Kaskaskia. The first territorial legislature convened in 1812, and Illinois was admitted to the Union in 1818. Shadrach Bond was the first governor.

Serious Indian troubles beset those who ventured early into Illinois. The Sacs and Foxes were eventually moved across the Mississippi river in 1823, and Black Hawk was defeated in 1832. Settlement then proceeded rapidly. Families poured into the state from the south, from New England, and from many foreign lands.

Chicago, the state's greatest city and second in size of all American cities, was almost left out of Illinois. When Illinois became a full-fledged state, a strip of land 51 miles wide was added to the northern boundary of the original territorial limits. Today this strip of land, with its Lake Michigan shore line, contains 55 per cent of the state's population—and Chicago!

A lot has happened in Illinois. Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon church, was killed at Nauvoo in 1844. The Illinois and Michigan canal was built in 1848, and the Illinois Central railroad was constructed from 1850 to 1856. In 1848, the state barred slavery, and there followed the historic debates of Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas. Illinois sent 214,133 soldiers into the field during the Civil war. In 1871 occurred the great Chicago fire, and the railroad and Haymarket riots took place soon after. Chicago was host to the World's Columbian exposition in 1893, and to the Century of Progress exposition in 1933-34. And there was, of course, the gang warfare of prohibition days!

In Illinois, John Deere gave to the world the steel plow. Wild Bill Hickok, the western sheriff, was born south of Mendota. Ulysses S. Grant was an Illinois cobbler when the Civil war broke out. At Starved Rock, a band of Indians starved to death rather than surrender to their enemies. Headed by the Harpe brothers, an outlaw gang used Cave in Rock on the Ohio river as headquarters. One of the oldest settlements in the state, Shawneetown, was recently moved in its entirety to higher ground to escape flood waters. Vandalia was once the capital of the state, before Springfield was selected. Indian mounds, built basketful by basketful of earth, carried by man, may be seen at Cahokia.

The list grows long. All happened in Illinois, where Abraham Lincoln split rails, kept a store, and wooed Ann Rutledge.

With an elevation of 267 feet at Cairo and 1,241 at Charles Mound, Illinois is covered for the most part with a deep layer of glacial drift, but in the river bottoms are deposits of alluvial silt, forming a rich loam of unusual fertility. It is a land of corn and grain, fat livestock and fine homes. In the south part of the state, known as "Egypt," is an extension of the Ozarks, with fruit orchards, coal mines, scenic grandeur. There's Jo Daviess county in the northwestern part with beautiful Apple River canyon. Everywhere in Illinois are landmarks hallowed by the name of Abraham Lincoln.

A lot of things have happened in Illinois — enough, in fact, to make it one of the great livestock, dairying, farming, mining, oil-producing and industrial states of the Union, nor does it lack in the development of education, science, literature and art. It is truly a great state. Its people made it that way.

HOW JESUS' FRIENDS RESPONDED

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:16-20; 5:18-20; 10:46, 52; Luke 5:27, 28.

MEMORY SELECTION—He left all, rose up, and followed him.—Luke 5:28.

Friendship calls for an exchange —not of gifts or possessions necessarily, but of service, love and fellowship.

The friends of Jesus responded to the warmth of His affection and the appeal of His call, and they gave themselves in life and service to Him.

Many in the church have forgotten that part of the friendship of Jesus Christ. They want to count Him as their friend, they expect much of Him; but they give little or nothing in return. Their love is cold, their service indifferent, their witness powerless.

Not every one of Jesus' friends is called to be a preacher or a teacher. He needs those who will be His faithful followers, just a living testimony without special office or message.

To effectively present the contrasts of our lesson, we have arranged the verses in slightly different sequence. Among the friends of Jesus

I. Some Became Preachers (Mark 1:16-20).

These men had met Jesus before (John 1:35-51), but now He was ready to call them away from their daily occupation as fishermen and make them "fishers of men."

Such a change was not an easy one to make. It meant the giving up of an established earthly calling, a place in the community, home life and family, for the service of the Lord. That was to bring persecution, ridicule, poverty and loneliness. But "straightway they forsook their nets."

Let the members of the church and pastors be on the alert to sense the call of God to young men and women to the ministry and to the mission field, and then let them do everything possible to encourage them on their way.

II. Others Became Followers (Mark 10:46, 52).

When Jesus came by, blind Bartimaeus began to cry, "Jesus, son of David have mercy on me" (v. 47). Many around him tried to hush his voice (v. 48), but he cried the more.

Through that babel of voices Jesus heard him, stopped and sent for him, and healed him. The ear of our Lord is always attuned to hear the cry of the one in need, and His heart is quick to respond to his call. He can hear the cry of the repentant sinner through all the confusing sounds of our day.

Bartimaeus became a "follower" of Jesus. He probably had no position in the church, no call to preach, but what a testimony he had. (cf. John 9:25).

Jesus needs simple, steady followers. Men and women with a plain, effective testimony of salvation. The army of the Lord is not made up of generals and officers only. Perhaps we have more of them than we need.

III. Some Stayed at Home (Mark 5:18-20).

This striking story of the deliverance of the mad man shows the importance of testimony at home. The people had asked Jesus to leave (v. 17) because in delivering the maniac He had caused some swine to go mad and run into the sea.

These men needed a witness, and the most effective possible word to them would come from the delivered demoniac. He wanted to go with Jesus, but at the Master's word he stayed at home.

It is hard to leave home and loved ones to go afar to witness for Jesus Christ, but sometimes it is easier to speak for Him in a strange land than at home. Even Jesus found no honor in His own city.

If you are called to witness for the Lord in the small circle of your own family or community, trust God to make that word for Jesus tremendously effective. He can do it!

IV. Others Left Home and Business (Luke 5:27, 28).

Levi—better known to us as Matthew — was "a member of that hated group of renegade Jews, who served the Roman invader and helped him in his cruel work of wringing extortionate taxes from the people" (Earl L. Douglass). As a result, he was rich and undoubtedly had a fine home and every desirable material possession.

He had come to know Jesus and when the call came suddenly to follow Jesus, he did not hesitate; he did not stop to gather up his money; he did not sell his house; but he stood up and left all, and followed Jesus.

If Jesus really means everything to a man or a woman there is nothing in this world that can hold him back when Jesus calls. He is ready to go to the ends of the earth, and let whosoever will care for the business, his possessions, everything (cf. Matt. 19-29).

Late Spring Burning Is Menance To Wildlife

--Research proves that spring burning does not improve pasture or hay land. In fact, fire destroys the organic matter with which soils are enriched. Late spring burning is particularly bad from a game management standpoint. At this time of the year almost every grassland fire burns alive nests of helpless baby rabbits. Those same grass lands harbor the nests of ground nesting birds, and even a fast-moving fire will invariably destroy the nest and its contents. Burning is unwise, especially during April and May, is a serious menace to wildlife populations.

IT PAYS TO WAIT FOR A SURGE

Even the full swing of stepped up peacetime production can't quite meet the demand for Surge Milkers.

Dairy families need a machine that will do more of their work and save more of their time — they need Surge Milking.

The simple fact is that the Surge does do automatically what other machines have to be helped to do.

The Surge does do more of your work and save more of your time.

That's why you can afford to wait just a little longer and make sure you get a Surge.

A Modern Machine is a better investment.

What is your GUESS on our profits... ?

SOMETIMES, although an idea is wrong, it does no harm. Like the idea that a square jaw is the sign of will power. That winters aren't as severe as they used to be, or that red hair denotes quick temper.

But there are other wrong ideas, which are definitely harmful to public confidence in and understanding of industry. One such idea is the current "guessing" about profits made by large business organizations.

Many people are apt to grossly exaggerate the money made by business. So Opinion Research Corporation (an independent organization) made a survey to learn just what the public thinks about profits. Compare these guesses and yours with the International Harvester profit figures given below.

Public guess on war profits . . 30.0¢
I H four war year average profit . . . 4.9¢

In this survey, the average of the guesses by the public of the war-time profits made by industry was . . . thirty per cent (30%).

But in the four war years of 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945, the profits of International Harvester Company averaged only . . . 4.9% on sales. Less than one sixth of what the general public "guessed" for all industry.

For this period, the year by year per cent of profits on sales was: 1942—7.34, 1943—5.59, 1944—3.95, 1945—3.92.

Public guess on peace profits 18.0¢
I H four pre-war year average profit . . 7.17¢

In the four peace years of 1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941, the profits of International Harvester Company averaged . . . 7.17%. This is well under half of what the public "guessed" for all industry.

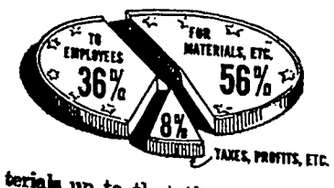
Majority think fair profit in normal times is . . . . . 10¢
I H ten-year average is less than 7¢

The survey indicates the public knows that in our economy profits are indispensable. And the majority regard 10% as a fair rate of profit in normal times. Many large businesses, including ourselves, would consider it a banner year if we could reach this figure. Our average profit for the last ten years—four war and six peace—was 6.43%—more than a third less than what the public considers fair.

All these figures show that our profits are not high. As a matter of fact, the entire farm machinery industry is a low profit industry. In 1944, the Federal Trade Commission published a list of 76 industries ranked in order of their ratio of profits to sales. The farm machinery industry was 57th on the list.

What About Current I H Prices?

When the War ended and we planned our peace-time production, we had hoped to be able to serve our farmer customers at the same level which has held since 1942, regardless of war-time increases in costs of wages and materials up to that time. But recent developments have forced a change in our plans.



Wages and materials nearly all of every dollar the harvester takes in from sales, government board has recognized and the Company has agreed to pay a general wage increase of cents per hour for Harvester factory employees. The Company has also allowed prices on raw materials which it purchase in large quantities has had an average increase of 8.2%.

There has been no increase in our prices since frozen by the Government 1942.

So our situation today is what we BUY costs us 1 We will be paying average wages 56% above 1941. we SELL we get only 1 This condition cannot met out of our present of profit.

Future Prices on I H Products

It is plain that price re needed to meet the wage and material co we must carry.

We regret this nece prefer to lower prices, sible, rather than raise we know our customers have us do that. We hav be able to "hold the line,

But we do not see ho avoid operating at a l prices continue to remai present frozen levels. NOT "cut corners" on products, because QUA THE FOUNDATION BUSINESS.

Our customers can that we will seek no m moderate profit, both our policies and becaus approximately 300 co fighting us vigorously business. Our request relief will be no more th essary to insure continu to our customers, contin for our employees, and able return for our stoc

Winnebago Council Serves 2100 Boys In Scouting

WATERMAN HEADS SCOUT CAMPAIGN

Annual Drive For Funds Begins Monday

Rush Gabrielson, District Finance Chairman for the Hancock District, Boy Scouts of America, announced this week that plans are very near complete to conduct the annual "Find the Friends of Scouting" campaign in this district. The campaign will get under way on Monday, April 29th with a "kick-off" meeting in the several communities.

C. G. Waterman has been appointed to head the campaign in Klemme and will meet with his committee Monday morning for an "early-bird" breakfast after which the campaign will be put into full swing in Klemme.

This Campaign is being conducted throughout the entire Winnebago Council to raise $21,-50.80, a budget adopted at the annual meeting of the Council in January. The money will be used to bring the Scouting Program to all boys of Scouting age in the following counties: Butler, Cerro Gordo, Floyd, Franklin, Hancock, Mitchell, Winnebago, Worth and Wright. This Council is governed by an Executive Board of men from each county.

During the past 10 years, this Council has made a very fine record of service to boyhood. In 1936, 792 boys were enrolled in the program. Today, that number has grown to 2103. This does not take into account almost 500 volunteer adult leaders. The council employs three professional men who work throughout the Council, helping the volunteer leaders conduct the program.

Be ready when a solicitor calls on you for a contribution to the Boy Scouts of America.

SGT. LUDEKE TELLS OF PACIFIC TYPHOON

Wind Blew 95 Miles Per Hour On Guam

Sgt. Paul Ludeke, who is now stationed at Guam, in the Pacific, writes his parents Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ludeke of near Meservey, that he is safe after the typhoon that swept over that Pacific island in late March. The wind blowing at 95 miles per hour changed its course and did not hit full force, which would have been 120 miles per hour. However, it did considerable damage to telegraph and communication lines. The men took refuge in steel quonset huts during the storm.

Sgt. Ludeke is serving in the 20th Air Force and has full charge of the service center. He operates the large diesel driven power generators, and also inspects all kinds of teletype and other machines as well as radio and detection devices.

He was recently promoted to Sergeant and the recommendation of the Company Commandant reads as follows: "The work and achievement of Cpl. Ludeke speak for themselves. Through his untiring efforts and working beyond regular hours together with the intelligence displayed he has overcome former power difficulties and established a highly dependable service."

Sgt. Ludeke has been in service 14 months and overseas since August. He was in Cebu, and Leyte, P. I. until February when he was sent to Guam. His present address is:

OBITUARY OF MRS. JULIA BELL

MRS. JULIA BELL, a resident of Avery Township for over 30 years, died at the Lutheran Hospital in Hampton, Iowa, Saturday morning, April 20, 1946, at the age of nearly 72 years.

Mrs. Bell was born June 12, 1874, the youngest of a family of five children born to P. P. and Mary Brannam. Her one brother and her three sisters all preceeded her in death, and with the passing of Mrs. Bell, the earthly labors of this entire family have ceased.

But, the influence of a good life does not cease at the grave, and the good example and the kindly teachings of Mrs. Bell will live on in the hearts of her children and her grandchildren.

Mrs. Bell spent her childhood years on a farm near Weldon, Illinois, where she completed her rural school education and became a member, at the age of 12, of the Shilo United Brethern Church.

December 15, 1892, at the age of 18, Julia Brannam and Wm. Bell were married. They became the parents of five children, all of whom survive. They commenced housekeeping on a farm near Maroa, Illinois, and continued to farm in Illinois for 21 years; then the family moved to Iowa, and farmed one year near Garner, and thirty-one years in Avery Township.

Mr. and Mrs. Bell celebrated their 50th Wedding Anniversary in 1943.

Mrs. Bell became ill with diabetes several years ago, and about a month ago other complications made her condition serious and her last days were spent at the Hampton hospital.

She leaves of her immediate family, her husband Wm. Bell; five children:

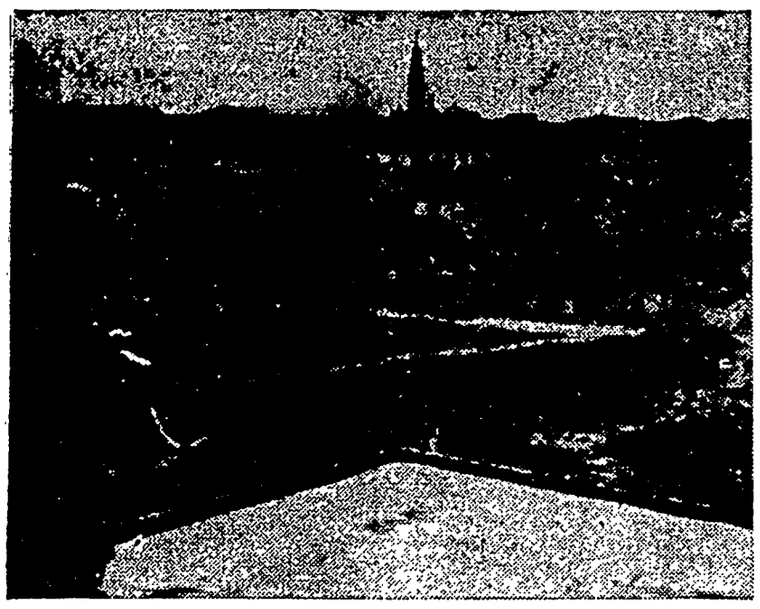
Wm. Jefferson Bell, Klemme,
Fred Bell, Klemme,
Mrs. Myrtle Lassahn, Mason City,
Russell Bell, Goodell,
Kenneth Bell, Garner,
also five grandchildren.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

UNO Weathers First Big Test; Rail Unions Balk at Pay Award; Civilian Output at Peak Rate

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



Seated on stone block of ruined public building, Polish girl views desolation of once modern building section of Warsaw. Once proud Polish capital is now ghost city of Europe, with half of its population half-starved and ill-clad.

UNO:
Weather Storm

Fraught with danger to the United Nations Organization and world peace, the tense Russo-Iranian dispute melted under the promise of diplomatic compromise, with Moscow saving face and Tehran its sovereignty.

Secretary of State James Byrnes, chief U. S. delegate to the UNO security council, started the happy train of events, suggesting that both countries state their position in the dispute over Russian failure to withdraw from Iran before UNO considered action in the case.

Russia had walked out of the security council after its decision to consider the question and Byrnes' proposal offered an excellent opportunity for the Reds to walk back in without losing prestige. Making the most of the chance, the Russians wrote UNO that they were pulling out of Iran without imposing any conditions for their retirement and their troops should be gone by May 6.

Taking his cue, Iran's representative then told the security council that if definite assurances could be obtained that the Russians would apply no pressure for oil concessions or Red-backed provincial governments as a condition for withdrawal, Iran would consider the matter closed.

And upon that happy note, UNO appeared to have overcome its first great hurdle.

RAIL PAY:
Balk at Findings

In protesting the 16-cent-an-hour raise awarded by a labor-management arbitration board, railroad union officials declared that the boost granted failed to meet higher living costs and adjust differences in pay between railroad workers and employees in other industries.

Declaring railroad workers were entitled to a 46-cent-an-hour increase, B. M Jewell, representing 15 non-operating unions, and E. E. Milliman, president of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, asserted that the minimum award should have included 11½ cents an hour for higher living costs plus the general industry-wide 18½ cent-an-hour postwar advance.

Meanwhile, railroad officials also complained against the arbitration board's wage decisions, estimated to add up to $400 per year for 1,220,000 members of three operating and 15 non-operating unions and cost the carriers $584,000,000 annually.

Echoing the carriers' warnings that increased wages would require rate boosts, President Fred G. Gurley of the Santa Fe announced that the 16-cent-an-hour award was too large and his road would immediately appeal for higher freight tariffs. Stating that the wage increases would add $25,000,000 yearly to Santa Fe operating costs, Gurley said the boost coupled with higher material, supply and fuel costs against reduced income made the step necessary.

Because both the railroads and unions had agreed to accept the arbitration boards' findings as final in submitting their dispute for settlement, no work stoppage loomed because of disagreement over terms.

The recommendations were handed down even as a fact-finding panel conducted hearings on demands of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen for a 25 per cent wage increase and changes in working rules. In demanding that wages and working rules be considered simultaneously, the two unions refused to join the other 18 in submitting the pay issue to arbitration.

CONGRESS:
Pay Adjustment

Government employees were in line for a pay increase as a result of congressional action but an administration measure to raise the minimum wage to 60 cents an hour appeared doomed because of the farm bloc's insistence that the same bill hike the parity formula over President Truman's protest.

The senate and house strove to get together on a uniform pay increase for U. S. employees following their approval of conflicting raises. While the senate had o.k.'d an 11 per cent boost, the house voted a $400 a year advance. Since the house also decided to limit department appropriations in the 1947 fiscal year to those of 1946, however, the higher pay would cover fewer employees and thus cut the federal payroll by 2000,000.

In pushing for an upward revision of the parity formula as an amendment to the 60-cent-an-hour minimum wage bill over President Truman's veto threat, the farm bloc sought to protect farmers' returns in a period of rising costs. Trumpeting administration disapproval, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson declared revision of the parity formula to include farm wages would result in a 33 per cent boost in farm prices and spark an inflationary cycle.

PRODUCTION:
Rosy Prospects

In meeting the pent-up and ordinary demands of consumers, requirements for a large military establishment and heavy exports, the U. S. faces an unparalleled period of prosperity, Reconversion Director John W. Snyder indicated in a report to President Truman.

John Snyder

Despite work stoppages and material shortages, civilian production had reached a rate of 150 billion dollars during the first three months of 1946, Snyder said, with private wages and salary payments returning almost to the pre-V-J Day date of 82 billion dollars. Non-agricultural employment totaled 44,700,000 in February, with 2,700,000 jobless seeking work.

Indicative of the huge demand for goods, Snyder said that consumer and business purchases during the first quarter of 1946 equalled those of the Christmas period in contrast to an ordinary drop of 10 to 12 billion dollars. Though overall civilian production rose, the textile shortage remained acute, being aggravated by mills' refusal to sell unfinished goods because of higher profits on bleached or printed cloth.

Notwithstanding increasing production and high taxes, the threat of an inflationary spiral remains, Snyder said. Noting the trend, he pointed out that on March 15 wholesale food prices were 3.1 per cent above those on the same date last year and the prices of other products were up 2.5 per cent.

FARM LOANS:

Farm operating loans will be made to approximately 10,000 farmers—principally World War II veterans—this spring with the additional 15 million dollars made available to the Farm Security administration by deficiency appropriation.

Legislation increased the amount for rehabilitation loans this fiscal year from 67½ to 82½ million dollars with the additional amount permitting continued lending through last spring.

Laundries Boom

Showing a continuing trend in increased patronage of commercial laundries, the nation's laundries did a record-breaking 634 million dollar business in 1945. This all-time high represents increases of 4.6 per cent over 1944 and 127 per cent over 1933.

Increases in laundry services sales volume were reported from every section of the country.

OVERSEAS RELIEF:
London Confab

The problem of tiding war-stricken countries over the 1946-'47 consumption year concerned delegates from 18 Allied, neutral and former enemy nations at the Emergency Economic conference for Europe being held in London.

With the U. S. aiming to ship 1,000,000 tons of wheat monthly toward a goal of 11,000,000 tons, efforts were bent on stimulating contributions from other countries to fill out the huge deficit. In this connection, a report of the conference's combined food board recommended that Russia be requested to furnish cereals and that steps be taken to increase the extent of Argentine exports.

Little Ireland followed the U. S. in setting an example to the participating nations, announcing it would send 35,000 cattle, 9,000,000 pounds of canned meat, 20,000 tons of sugar as well as milk, bacon and cheese to the continent this year. Normally Eire sends most of its cattle and eggs to Britain.

MIHAILOVITCH:
U.S. to Aid

Lauding Gen. Draja Mihailovitch's contributions to the Allied cause in the early stages of the European war, the U. S. state department asked the Yugoslav government that American officers attached to the Chetnik leader's headquarters be permitted to testify on his behalf in his forthcoming treason trial.

Famed for his daring guerrilla warfare against the Germans during the height of Nazi domination, Mihailovitch lost his grip on the Yugoslav resistance movement with Allied recognition of the Communist-trained Tito following the Russian resurge in 1943. At odds with Tito, Mihailovitch became a fugitive, charged with collaborating toward the end with the Germans invaders.

In coming to Mihailovitch's defense in the face of bitter Communist allegations against the Chetnik leader, the state department said many American army fliers had been rescued and returned to Allied lines through the daring efforts of his forces. It was also pointed out that U. S. officers were attached to Mihailovitch's headquarters as liaison men in co-ordinating resistance operations.

F.D.R.:
Sell Stamps

Individual hobbyists and dealers shared in the purchase of Franklin D. Roosevelt's famed stamp collection, which brought heirs to his estate over $210,000. Representing a lifetime collection of the late President, the stamps were appraised in advance of the auction at $80,000.

Berry Hill, a New York dealer, was one of the biggest buyers at the sales, paying $1,885 for most of 29 lots of French stamps and die-proofs and $1,615 for four groups of German stamps included in statistical albums showing the extent of inflation in the reich after World War I.

Dr. L. L. Ruland, a hobbyist, topped bids to pay $4,700 for 62 lots of Chinese stamps presented to Mr. Roosevelt by Chiang Kai-shek. K. Biloski, a Canadian dealer, paid $2,100 for 848 stamps of a Russian collection tendered to the late President by Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff.

Almost $8,000 was realized on the sale of 107 lots of Venezuelan stamps and albums.

NEAR EAST:
Plot Thickens

Long the pawns of European power politics, natives of the Near East again figured in the diplomatic double play of the oil-rich region, with reports that the Russians were aiding chieftains of 5,000,000 Kurds in Iran, Turkey, Iraq and Syria in the establishment of an independent republic.

Though the Kurds in these countries enjoy relative freedom in the mountainous regions under local chieftains, the independence movement reportedly has thrived under Russian backing. An independent Kurdish republic already has been proclaimed with headquarters at Mehabad in northern Iran and Russian technicians were said to have arrived there to help strengthen native forces.

Headed by Ghazi Mohammed, the Kurdish movement was thrown into gear at a conference of tribal leaders held in Baku, Russia, last November. Revenue and troops reportedly are being furnished by the chieftains who attended the powwow, with the heart of the movement centered in British controlled Iraq. Like Iran, Iraq's oil fields form part of the huge near eastern deposits prized by the major powers.

ASIA:

With production off 40 billion pounds below the 1936-40 average, Asiatic countries are threatened with a serious rice shortage, especially in areas where the cereal is the staple diet, the department of agriculture said. The scarcity is the result of a small 1945-46 crop, which was reduced by the war, and inability to transport comparatively small surpluses to shortage areas. It will become most acute in the next few months as stocks from the 1945-46 harvest become exhausted.

Push for Draft as Army Recruitment Misses Mark

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — Uncle Sam is completing the biggest "help wanted" campaign in history and he's afraid it hasn't been a 100 per cent success.

When the tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart, the men who served their country "take up the plough-shares or the pen as a simple citizen again," and somebody has to look around for more to make up the peacetime army and navy. That's what Uncle has been doing.

Life on the bounding main has always had sufficient appeal, especially to inlanders, to keep the navy up to par without much effort. But Americans ordinarily just don't go for soldiering, and that fact has the war department worried. It doesn't decide how big or little the army must be. It gets its orders from higher up. Such and such is America's policy—the war department has to get enough pairs of sound legs and arms and enough cool heads to carry it out.

Conscription has always been unpopular. We don't even like to use the word. But we have to get the men. Hence the fight to extend the draft and hence the greatest recruiting campaign this or any other country has ever launched. The sum expended on this campaign is big, even compared to the amount spent to remind America of "the pause that refreshes." It was run like any other advertising campaign, with a selection of the media best suited for its purposes. Newspapers, daily and weekly, magazines, especially those devoted to popular science, billboards and radio, posters and window displays were generously used.

It did bring in 320,251 recruits, but that isn't enough. And enlistments have declined steadily from their peak in November. That month 185,000 men either signed up or "reupped" as we used to say. But watch the numbers shrink! December, 131,000; January, 113,000; February, 93,000; March (estimated) 73,000; April, ??????

Seek to Better G.I.s Lot

Besides this vigorous campaign a real, sincere and sustained effort is being made to improve the life in barrack and drill-field. Hearings to hear the G.I. gripes, with specific plans to right wrongs where they were found and can be corrected, a thorough examination of army justice by civilian lawyers selected by the American Bar association, a 20 per cent pay increase, all these are part of a plan furthered by Secretary of War Patterson whose one desire is to leave the army better when he retires than the way he found it.

But there are a lot of hurdles. One is the need of a higher type of soldier in these days of mechanized warfare; the second is the increasing standard of civilian wages with which the army has to compete. The automotive and the durable goods industries are the chief competitors and their pay is good.

However, there are intangibles which enter into the question too. A man has to have more than a desire for clothes, a roof and three square meals a day and no responsibilities. To enlist he has to have a certain love for adventure, a willingness to accept the hardships of barrack life in far countries.

The army doesn't really in its heart want the draft. It is a case of taking what they can get. I know of no officer who would not prefer a volunteer army. That is another intangible. But with the commitments which the United States has today and until a United Nations organization can be formed which can take over the military function of the separate countries, the need is men.

There is something strange about the opposition to extension of the draft as revealed in the hearings. In my personal contacts I have not felt that opposition. By far the majority of people I have talked with on my recent trip through seven states have agreed that extension of selective service was necessary—some said a necessary evil—but still necessary. One of the most carefully conducted polls undertaken by the National Opinion Research center of Denver university has this to say:

"A substantial majority of the public in this country are convinced that—in spite of the military implications of the atom bomb—the United States needs peacetime military training. This conviction is evidenced by nation-wide survey results just released by the National Opinion Research center, University of Denver.

"To test the stability of public opinion on the issue, NORC asked separate but comparable cross-sections of the population two differently worded questions, one stating an argument against conscription in view of the military implications of the atom bomb, the other stating an argument for conscription in view of atomic implications. No matter how the question is worded, a strong majority favor compulsory military training in this country.

"Even the anti-conscription wording elicits a 68 per cent majority in favor of military training despite the atom bomb, while the pro-conscription question elicits no more than a 71 per cent majority in favor of the idea."

Some of the opposition to the legislation came from people who were dupes of what many officials believe to be subversive organizations. Some has been fostered by congressmen looking for votes.

At this writing, however, it seems that common sense and patriotism are going to come to Uncle Sam's rescue.

Cut German Beer Supply

I have just been in touch with the state department and am able to say, unofficially, but by no means uncertainly, that the Germans are not going to get a soft peace. I do not refer to the plan for slicing German industry to a very thin piece or the renewed efforts at de-Nazification in the American zone. What I am able to report is a step recently taken which the Germans will undoubtedly consider cruel and unusual punishment.

They are not going to be allowed, as they hoped they would be, to brew beer. The United States government has ruled "nothing doing" because of the food situation and "other reasons."

For the precise data on the situation I am indebted to my former colleague, the Western Newspaper Union's correspondent, now in Germany, Pauline Frederick. Here it is:

"The situation on brewing of beer in the three other zones of Germany is as follows, based on the reports given us by the agricultural representatives of these zones in Berlin:

"British zone—Brewing of beer prohibited by military order.

"French zone—Brewing permitted until the recent critical food shortage stopped it.

"Russian zone—Brewing permitted but no information is available on the amount of grain being used in the Russian zone for this purpose.

"The proposed brewing program in the American zone requires 39,000 tons of barley which will produce about 25 per cent of the 1931 consumption based on a 12-month period in our zone. The 1931 production was the lowest on record. No coal is permitted for brewing purposes until local food processing needs have been supplied.

"Thirty-nine thousand tons of barley represents the breadgrain ration requirements of our zone for approximately 10 days. The relative caloric value of 39,000 tons of barley in the form of beer is 50.32 billion calories, or to put it another way, one liter is equal to 100 grams of bread in caloric value.

"In the brewing process as compared with the utilization of barley for bread approximately 20 per cent of the food value of barley is lost.

"The whole question of brewing beer in our zone is a big political one and promises have been made by the minister-presidents and directors of agriculture that this beer would be forthcoming in the spring months when farmers and workers can have it in the heavy working season. The German authorities have agreed that if the beer is made it will not be issued as a supplement to the present ration but will be issued as a substitute for bread based on its caloric value."

Well, politics or no politics, the Germans aren't going to get their beer—let the foam fly where it may.

United Nations of N. Y.:

New York is the breath-taking stone and steel monument to the 20th Century. It was erected by the brawn, brains and sweat of foreigners and their descendants. The varied nationalities, religions and races have lived together in peace and enjoyed the benfits of democracy. New York is the striking reality of the American dream. . . . If one great city can be the living example of the UN ideals—and if 48 United States can do it—so can the United Nations. . . . New York represents the test-tube of the One World experiment. If 8 million people can accomplish that—billions can. For the experiment has succeeded far beyond the wildest hopes of starry-eyed dreamers and prophets.

Our fabulous metropolis should be an inspiration for visiting UN delegates. Here is living proof of UN ideals. The Big Town's diversity of creeds and nationalities would amaze even many native New Yorkers. Every member of the United Nations has contributed to its myriad population, plus some nations that aren't members. This is a big city and a little world.

The British atmosphere of Ye Olde English Chop Houses along Thames Street. Many of them are replicas of famed eateries in London. They feature wood-paneled walls, separate stalls and are decorated with early prints. The cuisine is simply ripping, old boy. It is usually so quiet there—you can hear a monocle drop.

The West Forties and Fifties have a French population that is large enough to form a true French Quarter. Bastille Day and other French national holidays are celebrated here, and many restaurants serve Gallic dishes. If you pass this sector — you can enjoy the sight of stylishly - groomed mademoiselles living up to their reps as slick chicks. Whew-la-la!

Every section of the planet is represented in our incredible overgrown hamlet. Among the foreign colonies that thrive here are the Hindus, Persians, Mexican Indians and Koreans. The Hindus and Persians are for the most part prosperous merchants and importers. . . . The mosque in Brooklyn attracts devout Mohammedans. Most of the Mohammedans in our town are Turks.

The Estonians periodically hold music festivals, at which many of the men and women appear in the Estonian peasant costume—and a good time is had by all. . . . An imposing edifice known as the Norwegian Seamen's Church is maintained chiefly for Norwegian sailors. It has always had its pastor selected by church and governmental authorities in Norway.

The East Side Armenian shops—holes-in-the-wall — feature copper coffee urns, silver vases, ornate Victorian lamps and mantel clocks and an occasional porcelain shepherdess. Priceless antique metalware is sold here as well as the shoddiest machine-made articles.

After Czechoslovakia became an independent nation in 1918 many Slovaks from downtown moved up into the Czech quarter, and the two groups have combined many of their interests. Pride in their languages and traditions has prompted them to maintain separate schools where (after public school hours) the children can be taught their native speech and history. One of the city's most colorful spectacles is the annual Decoration Day Czechoslovak parade in native costume.

The Latin-American colony on Saturday nights is alive with excitement. Dance dens are throbbing with rhumba rhythms. Watch these lithe people weave their ball-bearing torsos during the tantalizing tempos. They make the rhumba a fine art.

Famed Chinatown is packed with more happy orientals than you can find in Asia. Here are unique joss houses where Chinese Buddhists worship. Shops hawk exotic herbs at fantastic fees. And if you listen closely, you can pick up the jive lingo and swift patter of the almond-eyed jitterbugs.

At the foot of Washington Street you will appreciate New York's cosmopolitan rep. This is the Syrian Quarter where newsstands feature Arabic dailies.

Turks, Armenians and Greeks also make their homes here. Shops glitter with vivid Syrian silks of rainbow hues. Coffee houses and confectioneries of the Levantines add a picturesque touch. Occasionally, you can be startled by the sight of an old man in a fez.

Little Italy's rollicking fiestas are among the town's wow scenes. The streets are strung with lights, and happiness gets a workout. The people sing and dance and toss inhibitions to the winds.

"Off We Go"

AVIATION NOTES

PURELY PERSONAL

Some readers have asked whether or not the editor of "Off We Go" is a pilot. Well, we ain't! We might be called a flying reporter, or excess baggage, or something, but we're not a pilot. We took our first airplane ride a score of years ago in an Eaglerock biplane. Remember that plane? It was a two-seater, one behind the other, open cockpit, etc. Later on we took more flights, including a ride with the veteran pilot Clyde Ice in a Ford trimotor job. During World War II we spent three years with the Air Transport Command in various capacities. We were successful in keeping ferry pilots from getting us into hot ships, but we did have a few rides that were full of thrills and chills.

Back to the Eaglerock for a moment: We used a 40-acre field as our airport. Telephone lines, buildings, grain elevators, and a dozen other hazards made flying a little tough. A group of us finally got the city fathers to purchase a quarter-section, 160 acres, for a municipal airport. Most people thought it was far too large then.

Jose Iturbi Nervous

Still personal: One time while we were in the ATC, we flew to Kansas City in a C-47 (military version of the DC-3) to meet Jose Iturbi, the famed pianist. As we started back to the field where he was to give a concert for the G.I.s, we noticed he was jittery and didn't seem satisfied to sit still. At first we thought he was a little scared, but he soon let us know that he'd like to go into the cabin with the pilot and co-pilot. Jose, the rascal, is a pilot himself, and he likes to be where the action is! He had something like 800 hours pilot time, we learned. His wish was granted.

MADISON AIRPORT

Lt. Col. E. O. ("Gene") Strouse has been chosen temporary manager of the Madison municipal airport. Strouse, recently discharged from the AAF, served in the RCAF also during World War II. He piloted a B-29 over Tokyo on raids in the Pacific war, and before the war operated a plane at Muscoda airport. —Muscoda (Wis.) Progressive.

More Private Flying, Says Hogan

States from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast will have the biggest boom in private plane flying, according to Everett Hogan, veteran pilot and operator of a Mitchell, Neb., airport. His prediction is based on the more favorable weather and "wide open spaces" where fast flying is easier. Hogan estimated that for the plane owner who rents space, the hangar cost for a year runs from $400 to $500. Gasoline on the smaller planes is about the same as for an automobile.

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

Safety Bull Pen

By W. J. Dryden, WNU Farm Editor.

The use of a safety bull pen is not only a necessity but is a practical method of protecting the bull, the owner or attendant, his family and visitors from injuries caused by an enraged bull.

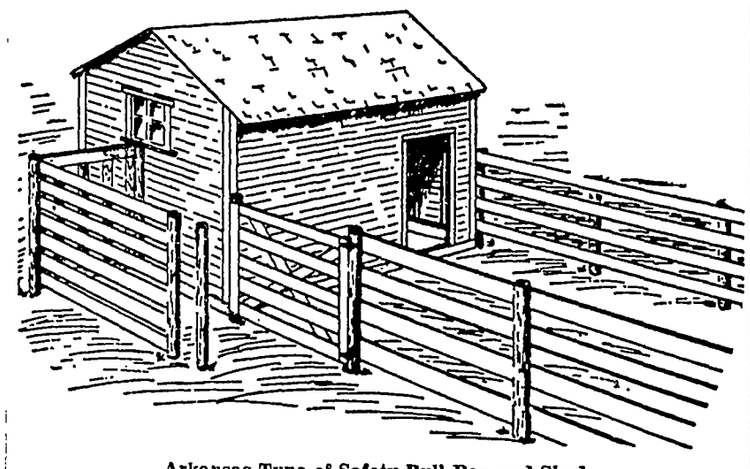
The Arkansas pen provides a safe, convenient and time-saving means of handling the bull. More years of service are possible and there is little chance of spreading disease from one herd to another through bull service, when the safety pen and breeding chute are used.

The time required in feeding and handling a dairy bull in a safety pen is no greater than that required in handling any other animal on the farm, especially if water and pasture are provided in the exercising yard.

A careful study of the use and construction of the safety bull pen and its provision for convenience and ease in handling the bull for service, may result in slight modifications to these plans. The main requirements are shelter, adequate room and sanitation for the bull and safety and convenience for the attendant.

The best construction would consist of a six-inch concrete of smooth masonry foundation, 2 by 6-inch studding, matched siding and tight roof. Inside the studs there should be two-inch planking to a height of four feet to prevent the bull from damaging the siding. The feed manger is equipped with a retaining stanchion for holding the bull when cleaning the stall, repairing gates or performing other services.

The location of the safety pen should be carefully planned to include shade, water, good drainage and convenience. The type of material used in the construction of the bull pen, shed and breeding rack will depend, in part, upon local supplies and prices. It should be remembered, however, that the grade of lumber is important. Cheap lumber will prove expensive in this construction. Too many knots or defects in the lumber will soon result in bull breaking through with injury to himself or to others.



Arkansas Type of Safety Bull Pen and Shed.

In this type of construction the bull can be kept in confinement so that he may be stabled, watered, bedded and led back and forth to the breeding pen without the attendant necessarily coming in contact with the bull. The building problems of every farmer will be individual ones. Each farmer has a different system of management, and arrangements of one yard may not prove suitable for another farm or another farmer. It is up to each individual farmer to study his own requirements and plan his buildings accordingly. These plans are given more as suggestions than as actual working details.

In constructing the pens for the bull pen, it is often possible to utilize timber found on the farm. These may be used as posts as well as cross pieces. The first requirement of the bull pen is strength, and only such materials as are known to possess unlimited strength should be used.

It is always advisable to build separate bull pens for each bull, and in most cases it has been found advisable to place them so that the bulls will not be in sight of each other at any one time.

Causes of Damage

1. Siding boards broken by livestock.
2. Lack of protection on inside of barn.
3. Not sufficient room back of stalls.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D.C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Decentralization of Hospitals Promised

The veterans' administration in seeking to further decentralize hospital facilities for veterans is contracting with hospitals throughout the nation for "home town care" for veterans with service-connected disabilities, principally for those needing only "out-patient care."

In this connection Dr. Paul R. Hawley, chief medical director, announced that such service may be obtained in hospitals in Kansas, Michigan, California, New Jersey, Washington, Oregon and North Carolina and the service is being extended as rapidly as contracts may be signed.

A schedule of fees has been approved by VA. When the program is in complete operation, veterans with service-connected disabilities will contact the regular VA channels, as formerly, and then will select a doctor from a list of co-operating physicians if they cannot be cared for in a VA out-patient clinic. The service is free to the veteran and VA pays the doctor through the state medical service agency.

The plan will eliminate long trips by veterans to obtain medical care. The same regulations apply to those receiving similar treatment from their home town physician.

Questions and Answers

Q. Am I, as an officer, entitled to travel pay for my wife from point of my discharge to home while she is on terminal leave? She lived with me two months immediately prior to my discharge.—D. L. P., Pipestone, Minn.

A. Your letter indicates your wife was also an officer. I suggest you write to Dependent Travel Branch, General Accounting Office, Washington, D. C.

Q. When will World War I veterans receive a pension, and at what age? I have been sick ever since I got out of the army, but couldn't get a pension.—J. D. K., East Dubuque, Ill.

A. World War I veterans do not automatically get a pension at any age. They were awarded a bonus. If your illness was service-connected or aggravated by your service, your only hope is to apply for disability at your nearest veterans' administration office.

Q. My husband was a veteran of World War I, serving six weeks at Little Rock, Ark. He was given a medical discharge on account of his heart. He died last year of heart trouble. Would I be entitled to a widow's pension?—Mrs. O. E. P., Pocohontas, Iowa.

A. I am inclined to believe you might be, but you should make your application to the nearest veterans' administration office for their decision.

Q. My husband went to the army on July 2, 1942, and got an honorable discharge on October 7, 1942. I did not receive an allotment for myself and baby while he was gone. Is there any way I can get it now and is my husband eligible for the $20 a week for 52 weeks?—Mrs. L. D. C., Tullahoma, Tenn.

A. Although your husband was in the army less than 90 days, you might try getting back allotment by writing to the Army Central Adjusting office, 400 Goodfellow Blvd., St. Louis 20, Mo. If your husband received a medical discharge prior to 90 days of service and is unemployed, he is entitled to make application for a job at your nearest U. S. Unemployment Service and receive up to $20 per week until he obtains employment, but not more than 52 weeks.

Q. My son was employed by a firm in St. Paul as personnel manager before he entered service three years ago. He served in the European and Pacific theaters. He returned in January and went to see about his job again. His employer offered him another job at a much lower rate of pay. What can he do and can his company be made to give him his former job back?—Mother, Cloquet, Minn.

A. Under the Selective Service law your son is entitled to his old job or one of similar pay and seniority if he is physically able to fill the job. Suggest he contact his selective service board and they will see that he has legal representation.

Q. My son enlisted in the service the summer of 1942. I did not receive a family allowance until December 1, 1944. I was and still am his dependent mother. I would like to know if I am entitled to and can get family allowance beginning November 1, 1943, or for the year 1944. —A mother, Mathews Co., Va.

A. Family allowances to parents is not compulsory. The question is, was the allowance deducted from your son's pay during that year. If so, you are entitled to it. Write to Army Central Adjustment office, 4300 Goodfellow Blvd., St. Louis 20, Mo.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

RUSSIA IS LIKE U. S.

WASHINGTON. — Reminiscences of a Reporter—It's been a long time since the sixth Pan-American conference in Havana, 1928; but that conference has certain similarities with what's brewing in New York today. Calvin Coolidge made a special trip to Cuba, the first time in years a President set foot on foreign soil. Charles Evans Hughes, ex-secretary of state, dominated the U. S. delegation. Frank B. Kellogg, his successor as secretary of state, also fretted and fumed in the background.

Reason for the desire to impress the brethren: Worry . . . Worry over American troops on Nicaraguan soil. . . . Worry over American troops on Haitian soil. Worry about the right of American troops to intervene in various countries such as Mexico to protect U. S. oil.

Memory Flashes: Charles Evans Hughes, sedate, bewhiskered, impressive, buttonholing Latin delegates. He made a great picture, did a beautiful job of organizing a bloc of pro-U. S. A. nations. . . . Cuba, Panama were to us as Poland and Yugoslavia are to Russia today. . . . Hughes' objective: To prevent any discussion of intervention. In other words, the U. S. A. reserved the right to land troops on foreign soil without being hauled before the public court of Pan-Americanism. . . . Hughes won out. Our interventions in Haiti, Nicaragua, were successfully barred from the agenda. We didn't have to stage a walkout as the Russians did at New York.

Biggest Test: Whether the U. S. A. would consent to arbitrate disputes with its Latin neighbors. . . . Hughes had instructions to duck even this. The state department didn't even want to discuss the matter. It was a tough fight to bar all debate of arbitration, but Hughes won out even on this.

TROOPS IN NICARAGUA

PAN-AMERICAN ARBITRATION CONFERENCE, Washington, 1929—U. S. public opinion, usually ahead of the government, by this time had begun to change. . . . There had always been resentment against landing troops in Nicaragua. The Pulitzers plus other liberal newspapers poured a torrent of abuse on the state department. Even conservative papers were skeptical. . . . Charles Evans Hughes was raked over the coals for opposing even the discussion of arbitration at Havana. . . . Like Russia, we still demanded the veto, but unlike Russia, the American people didn't support their government. They were 'way ahead of it.

RUSSIA AND IRAN

NEW YORK, 1946—Today, Russia, fuming against the United Nations, is in the same boat as the U. S. A. before the Pan-American union. Instead of Nicaragua, it's Iran. . . But there is one essential difference. . . . In 20 years, the U. S. A. moved far ahead in international morality—due to the power of public opinion. The American people, its press and pulpit, were continually pushing their government. . . . The opposite is true of Russia. The Russian people know little about Iran, little about the UNO conference, have to take what their government gives them. A Stars and Stripes quiz of Red army soldiers showed that most of them thought Churchill was an American. . . . We have to make allowances for Russia because in a sense she is a new nation—sensitive and suspicious.

COLUMNIST ICKES

Probably it was pure accident, but Harold Ickes begins his new career as newspaper columnist on the same day he is needed most in his old job as coal administrator. And, good columnist that he is bound to be, probably most people would prefer Ickes at the helm in this coal dispute rather than wielding a pen three times a week.

As a columnist, Ickes should tell the inside story of how he outsmarted John L. Lewis during the last coal strike and made him call it off.

During Lewis' illegal walkout over organizing foremen last fall, Ickes pulled his trump card. The government-owned big inch and little inch pipelines no longer were needed to carry oil to the East coast; so Ickes threatened to convert them to natural gas.

With this trump card, plus the fact that the miners themselves didn't want to strike, Ickes bulldozed Lewis into calling the strike off.

UNRRA MERRY-GO-ROUND

After Mayor LaGuardia was appointed to take Governor Lehman's place, delegates of hungry nations at the Atlantic City UNRRA conference wisecracked: "We asked for 500,000 tons of wheat and you gave us a 'little flower'." . . . Without disparaging the many fine qualities of Fiorello, some felt that food problems would not be solved by an atomic bombshell. . . . The LaGuardia appointment was right out of the Missouri mule. The Little Flower is now at work.

Keep a wary eye on "shipped-in" vegetable plants. Make sure such plants are labeled "certified" before buying them. Plants not certified may be diseased and produce very little or nothing. Locally grown plants are more likely to be safe than shipped-in plants that are not certified.

Some gardeners waited too long to plant their peas. Peas in Iowa should be planted between April 1-15 to be successful. A Cooling vegetable such as peas must be matured before hot weather sets in.

In the well-planned garden, small successive plantings are made of some vegetables. This method insures a continuous supply of vegetables for table use much longer than when one large planting is made. Continue to make small plantings of lettuce and radishes every 2 weeks up until May 15.

Parsnips, vegetable oyster, carrots, beets, potatoes, turnips, cabbage and some others can be stored successfully in caves on the farm or in drain tiles by city gardeners. Turnips for storage should be planted in the late summer for maturing this fall.

Carrots and beets for storage should not be planted until late June or early July. Very small beet and carrot plantings should be made in April when they are to be used only for the table during the season. These vegetables become too large and woody for storage when allowed to grow all season.

Parsnips and vegetable oyster, however, should have a full season to mature. Only the late maturing varieties of common cabbage should be used for storage. Chinese cabbage should not be planted until July.

Cabbage is susceptable to

many kinds of disease. One of the most common is called "yellows" disease. It becomes noticeable in many gardens after warm weather sets in. The fungus organism lives over in the soil and enters the cabbage through its roots. Plants atacked are a lifeless, yellowish green color and are usually twisted and lopsided, in appearance, and normal growth is slowed up. The lower leaves start to drop prematurely.

The only solution for the gardener is to plant the "yellows" resistant varieties this spring. Some of these are Marion Market, Globe, and Wisconsin All-Seasons.

Production of peas is likely to be increased if they are provided support. Wire poultry netting or brush placed between the double pea rows is satisfactory. The peas are easier to pick and are cleaner than when on the ground. Before placing the support, it is well to cultivate lightly between the double rows to destroy weeds. Peas are rather delicate and must be handled carefully.

Plowing, disking, harrowing, planting and cultivating on the contour saves soil and it reduces the cost of power about 10 percent.

Stocks Show Penicillin Effective Mastitis Drug

A new and powerful weapon against the dairy farmers' worst enemy, mastitis, has apparently been found in the much-publicized drug, penicillin. Some veterinarians say that as many as 50 per cent of the dairy herds are prevented from producing their full potential milk output because of mastitis. Hence any progress against the disease is of interest to the dairyman.

Penicillin, research workers report, is effective against both the streptococcic and the staphylococcic types of mastitis. This fact embodies an important advance in mastitis control, as previous agents were effective only against the streptococcic type of infection. Another advantage of penicillin lies in its relatively small irritant action in the udder compared to some of the older drugs, which often produce marked reactions to their use.

Penicillin, however, in the hands of a capable veterinarian is not to be looked upon as the final solution to the mastitis problem. There are no substitutes for good management and periodic examination of the udder. The proper use of milking machines and strip cups, good stabling and bedding and elimination of sources of injury and chilling, combined with a program of early recognition and treatment of cases of mastitis, represent the most efficient and economic control program.

Sauerkraut Dates 'Way Back to 200 B. C.

Sauerkraut has a tradition of feeding working men, because records indicate that in 200 B. C. sauerkraut was a part of the rations served to the workmen who were building the Great Wall of China.

Sauerkraut is made by adding salt to shredded cabbage. The salt draws the sugar from the cabbage and certain bacteria cause the sugar to ferment. One of the products of this fermentation is lactic acid, which gives kraut much of its characteristic flavor. When kraut is eaten the lactic acid helps to keep the intestinal tract in a healthy condition.

Sauerkraut is not valuable as a source of any specific vitamin; however, among the minerals it does have considerable amounts of iron and some calcium. Kraut is especially well liked served with spare ribs or sausage. And in some states it is an accompaniment to roasted fowl.

Peanut Protein

Usually when we hear about protein, we think of body building materials—foods like meat, fish, eggs, milk, dried beans and peas, peanuts. Protein seems a far cry from such things as cold glue, used in book binding and on gummed tape; from paper coatings and special finishes on stationery and other papers; from cold water paints. In making peanut oil, manufacturers have had peanut meal left as a by-product. This meal is rich in protein. Up to now, it has been used mainly as a livestock feed. Scientists have known for a long time how to extract the protein from peanut meal and they've known it could be put to a number of industrial uses. However, discoloration of the protein by the skin of peanuts made the peanut protein useless as far as industrial needs are concerned until scientists of the department of agriculture, working in the Southern Research Laboratory in New Orleans, found a way to take out the pigment in peanut skins.

Pardon Me, Ma'am--- Did You Say Milk Bottles?

LADY! WE CERTAINLY DID SAY MILK BOTTLES!

—o—

Milk bottles are a serious problem with every dairy. Glass manufacturers can't supply all the bottles needed, and this, added to the breakage and loss of bottles, make it extremely important that all milk bottles be returned promptly.

If you have any idle milk bottles around your home, won't you please see that they are returned to the dairy immediately?

You who order milk from a store are requested to be sure to return bottles upon receipt of milk.

The Once Over
by H.I. Phillips

Sweet Round-House

Those designs for living in the world of tomorrow keep coming. Every day some fellow who must have studied architecture while riding in Mardi Gras parades springs something newer and screwier in housing.

The brass ring in this month's Caroussel Ride with Blueprints goes to a Kansas man who has produced a round bungalow.

It looks like a butter dish with ventilation arrangements, a super mousetrap with roof, a derby hat with windows.

It is made of aluminum and is suspended on cables from a steel shaft. The rooms, six of 'em, are cut in like slices in a pie. It is the ideal home for a six day bicycle racer who has married the winner of a marathon waltz and who is raising a family of hysterical roller skaters.

It takes a heap of living to make a place seem home, as Edgar Guest said. And Edgar never lived in a home where the tenants had to steal three laps on themselves to determine where the front door was.

A window runs all around the house. No matter where you sit you get a choice of views. Life in a house like this must make you feel like a cross between a roulette ball, the needle in a compass and breast of chicken under glass.

In such a home you are really a chocolate eclair with ears and a cream puff with plumbing troubles.

Viewed from a distance the place looks like half a watermelon with curtains over the wormholes.

In it there is the spirit of a Salvadore Dali dream sequence, a night-club designer's nightmare and a pinwheel maker's lost weekend.

We are ordering one for summer occupancy. But we will shoot the first neighbor who sticks his head into our living room and yells "Fifty dollars for a sprint!"

Spring Signs

Gentle spring is here I know—
The thrush sings in the tree,
The turtle dove is singing low,
(We'll soon bomb Bikini) . . .
The frogs are croaking on the pond,
The kids play mumble-peg,
Lambs gambol in the fields beyond . . .
(Will peace now lay an egg!).

The vernal season, yes, is here,
And I have ample proof:
Much gayer is the chanticleer,
The squirrels romp my roof;
I saw an oriole today,
The buds burst near my door—
And everywhere the people say,
"Looks like another war!"

The bluebird soon will be along,
The dew is on the grass,
The woodland now is full of song
And congress full of gas;
The hurdy-gurdies grind it out . . .
(The little states get knocked about
As ultimatums fly!).

The waterfall is foaming white,
The trout are seen to break,
I heard a nightingale last night . . .
(Joe Stalin's on the make);
Along the wall, the chipmunks run,
We soon will have bock beer,
(Our army has a rocket gun
To pierce the stratosphere!).

Have you heard about the UNO delegate who was disturbed in a New York hotel and phoned down, "I demand a little peace here!"?

There may be some good reason why no nation ever lends any money to Uncle Sam, but there can't be any why none ever offers him a cigar.

Use for Old Street Cars

The papers are devoting much space to the "discovery that old street cars can be converted into pretty comfortable dwellings. Discovery my eye! Years ago we were a surface-car tenant, a two-surface-car dweller to be exact. Two were hauled down to the beach of a Connecticut shore resort and a small living room built between them, with a porch added front and rear. Each car was used as a bedroom. We occupied a set-up with a bunch of boys back home. There was only one drawback. Jim Finnegan used to get in after midnight and enjoy ringing up fares.

Household Hints

Early in the spring the lawn should be rolled if the area is rough. Rolling should be done when the soil is friable but not wet. Then the grass should be thoroughly combed with an iron rake to remove the dead grass and debris. However, brooming the lawn with wire or rattan is harmful because the partially decayed grass clippings and other organic matter are removed and the soil surface is exposed to the drying winds and sun.

As you clean and store your blankets, quilts and comforts make them ready for use next winter. Fold lengthwise a strip of cloth about 12 inches wide and as long as the cover is wide and sew it over the end of the cover. This protects the bed coverings from soil where they come into contact with the body and protects the sleeper from irritation caused by rough blankets. The cloth protector may be washed frequently.

A lemon heated before squeezing will produce a lot more juice than if it is squeezed cold.

Poppy seeds must be sown in the open ground as soon as the ground can be prepared. If sown late, failure is likely to result unless seeds are carefully watered and shaded.

Camera-shy William Gehring, who wouldn't have his picture taken, won his place by helping greatly to bring the rich muck lands of northern Indiana into heavy production through the application of proper fertilizer, irrigation, crop diversification and highly mechanized farming. On his farm at Rensselaer, Ind., his production of mint, of which he sold more than $500,000 worth last year, has proven the financial possibilities of this crop. He also grows potatoes, sweet corn, and onions on his farm of 4,000 acres. Prior to 1931 he worked in a factory. Without farm experience he went to the muck lands to overcome their production problems and set an example to others.

A Veteran Farmer.

William Renk is a veteran farmer who has consistently followed a progressive policy. He emphasizes efficiency in every phase of farming, with the aid of three super-helpers, his sons. They are pioneers in architype construction of farm buildings, and their machine shop is a credit to their ability. Seven tractors, self-feeders, hay slides—and their ability to produce quality seed corn—hybrid—marks them as real progressive farmers. The Renks have developed a direct sales demand for their hybrid seed.

J. D. McGee started in 1928 on a small farm—purchased with borrowed capital. Last year his peanut crop was worth $40,000. Soil conservation plays an important part on his farm, as they must on any farm that succeeds. He is a director of the Georgia-Florida-Alabama Peanut Growers' association, and an authority on the economic problems of the industry. Congress has heard with interest his facts and figures on peanut production and possibilities.

"Speed Richards"—they call William Richards. This not only applies to his farm operations but to his former record as a racing car driver. He started out by leasing a tract near Providence, R. I. Later Richards purchased his present farm from earnings from the leased tract—tenant farming may pay well. He launched an extensive and costly fertilizing program—essential for this type of farming. A major innovation was a large irrigation system drawing on a lake as a water source.

In Many Organizations.

Speed Richards takes an active part in farm organizations. He is a member of the governor's advisory council on agriculture, the Boston Market Garden association, Town Finance committee, Extension Vegetable committee and Farm Bureau. At 38 he has three daughters, one son and a modern, successful, highly mechanized farm.

Thomas J. Pearsall believes in progressive plantation policies which have attracted national attention. He is not a farm owner, but he manages the famous Braswell farms at Rocky Mount, N. C., containing 22,000 acres. Starting 10 years ago, he was considered "revolutionary," because he was a strong supporter of education among his Negro tenants and sharecroppers. The result—labor turnover greatly reduced and crop yields increased. He installed mechanical and technical innovations, such as terracing and strip cropping. A state representative and president of the Agricultural Foundation, Inc., he is now raising two million dollars for the farm research program at North Carolina State college. Tom has a wife and two sons to aid him.

It is particularly noticeable that the section of the United States in which a farmer lives has little to do with his ability to be a "champion." These five farmers come from New England, the Mississippi valley, the North and the South. The American farmer can do his job in any state, or climate, when he sets himself to the task with a will.

Although the war is over, the world needs food—meats, grains, vegetables and fruits. But somehow we all have the feeling that the "champs" down on the farms of America will see that few people starve.

Georgia Boy Rose From Buck Private To 4-Star General

WASHINGTON.—He was born in Perry, Ga., in 1887, where his father published the Houston Home Journal. As a boy he worked around the newspaper plant but was more interested in the Perry Rifles, a local guard unit. Having heard his parents speak of former members of the Hodges' family as Confederate soldiers in the Civil war, he was determined to become a soldier.

He entered West Point in 1904 but because of trouble with mathematics left the United States Military academy and enlisted in the army as an infantry private. In 1909 he received his commission as a second lieutenant, simultaneously with the commissioning of his former West Point classmates. Instead of spending three years at the Point, he became an officer after service at various infantry installations. His early army career included service with General Pershing's Mexican Punitive expedition and the 6th Infantry regiment of the 5th division in France, Luxembourg and Germany in World War I.

GEN. COURTNEY H. HODGES

He was appointed commandant of the infantry school at Fort Benning, Ga., in 1940. He became chief of infantry in Washington, was made chief of the ground forces replacement and school command when the army was reorganized into ground, air and service forces, and later became commanding general of the X army corps. He was assigned to command the Third army, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, in February, 1943, and served in this capacity until March, 1944, when he was assigned to the First army in the European theater of operations.

Assistant to Gen. Omar N. Bradley when the First army took part in the invasion of Normandy, capture of Cherbourg, and the breakthrough at St. Lo, Hodges assumed full command in August, 1944. He paved the way for the Third army's and his famous First's spectacular lunges across France, was the first into Paris, first into Germany, first army commander since Napoleon to cross the Rhine river in battle, first to enter and clear out the Hurtgen forest in the cold winter months, and first to meet the Russians.

Among his higher decorations are the Distinguished Service Cross and the Silver Star from the first war and the Distinguished Service Medal and an Oak Leaf Cluster for services in the current conflict.

General Hodges presently commands the First army with headquarters at Fort Bragg, N. C.

From private to four-star general is a route any soldier would like to travel—and Courtney Hicks Hodges is one who did! And in future years some of America's highest ranking officers will come from the ranks, from among men who made the army a career.

Returned Veterans Are Good University Students

...LDER, COLO. — He went ... war—just a boy. He re... as a man—and went back ... "How's he getting along?" ... says W. C. Toepelman, ... of veterans' affairs at ... university. And, with few ..., they asked no special fa... because they were war vet...

...have been vets on the C. U. ... since July, 1944, but the re... cently concluded November, 1945, term offered the first real chance to study their achievements.

During the past term, 838 veterans registered for credit under the G.I. Bill of Rights and only 52 dropped out at the end of the term, Toepelman said.

The reasons given by many of the 52 were illness, poor academic progress, nervousness and failure to adjust. Some, however, dropped out to re-enlist in the army, transfer to another school or take a job. Toepelman said a few married veterans left school before registering for the November term because they couldn't find suitable housing.

The problem of adjustment? Toepelman said 55 vets solved that by taking refresher courses without credit during the November term and then registering for credit during the present term.

DECISIVE MOMENTS IN PETER'S LIFE

LESSON TEXT—John 1:42; Mark 8: 27-29; Luke 22:54-57, 61, 62; John 21: 15-17.

MEMORY SELECTION—We ought to obey God rather than men.—Acts 5:29.

Men are of primary interest to God. Our Lord Jesus has always been concerned about men, eager that they should be filled with all the fullness of His love and the beauty of His grace. He it is who stands by in the hour of weakness and failure to give renewed strength to His repentant child.

The life of Peter runs the gamut of human feelings from the height of joy and assurance to the depth of despair. He learned many of his lessons the hard way—by a stubborn struggle in the school of experience—but he came out into a glorious and triumphant faith in Christ.

I. A New Name and a Great Confession (John 1:42; Mark 8:27-29).

When a man comes to Jesus in true faith and devotion he becomes a changed man. The Bible speaks of it as a new birth, a radical change from darkness to light, a going from death to life.

A name is important in its bearing on the individual's life. How often parents hinder or embarrass a child with an unworthy name, or a foolish imitation of the name of some giddy individual in the public eye, but lacking real character.

Simon, which means "hearing" was completed by the name Peter meaning "rock," a token of this change of direction of life. The Lord gave it to him, and He knew all about the man, his past, present and future, the longings of his heart which were to be fulfilled in service for Him.

The great confession of Christ (Mark 8), which became the foundation of the church (see Matt. 16: 16), was the expression of the heart of this spiritually changed man. He knew what the Lord had done for him, and knew that it was the work of God, not the influence of some philosophy of man, nor the result of following a great teacher or an example.

"Thou art the Christ!" Such is the conviction and confession of the man or woman with the reborn life!

II. An Awful Failure and a Deep Repentance (Luke 22:54-57, 61, 62).

Peter had vaunted himself in declaring his everlasting loyalty to the Lord. His old self-satisfaction and boastfulness had overcome him. He had even come to the place where he felt capable of telling the Lord that He was mistaken.

He made the grave mistake of following the Lord "afar off" (v. 54). He did not intend to deny the Lord, but he had allowed himself to get into a position where it was hard to stand up for Him.

The lesson for us is evident. If we want our faith to be steady and true in the hour of the enemy's attack we must not get far from the Lord, nor may we find our fellowship with this Christ-denying world.

Peter's strong denial of our Lord, his use of language unbecoming to a believer, his quick falsehoods—all these mark the thing he did for what he knew it to be when he heard the cock crow—a terrible sin against the Christ.

The look of Jesus doubtless carried conviction, but one somehow feels that it was even more a look of tenderness and of assurance of the Lord's promised prayers for him.

The thing which brought the tears of repentance was the remembrance of the Lord's own words (v. 61). It is the recollection of the Word of God which brings a man to his senses spiritually.

Peter's repentance was real. So we find that Peter was restored and reinstated in his place of service for the Lord.

III. A Complete Restoration and an Obedient Service (John 21:15-17).

Jesus met Peter on the first Easter morning, so he was assured of forgiveness. But Peter and the others had returned to their old life as fishermen. They seem to have lost their vision, or had become discouraged.

But the Lord had not forgotten them. He appeared and told them where to catch fish, and then we have the lovely scene around the fire as they breakfasted together.

There it was that the Lord met Peter, and as he had denied Christ thrice he is asked to thrice declare his devotion to Him.

The man who thus declared his readiness to serve Christ to the end had many an opportunity to prove the sincerity of that profession. He met persecution and imprisonment, but to every effort of man to close his mouth or to change his witness he had the simple reply of absolute obedience to the Lord.

Tradition tells us that this faithfulness finally led Peter to a martyr's death. So we see a life made over, made powerful, made glorious for God through the matchless grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. He can do it for you, too. Will you let Him?

What is your GUESS on our profits...?

SOMETIMES, although an idea is wrong, it does no harm. Like the idea that a square jaw is the sign of will power. That winters aren't as severe as they used to be, or that red hair denotes quick temper.

But there are other wrong ideas, which are definitely harmful to public confidence in and understanding of industry. One such idea is the current "guessing" about profits made by large business organizations.

Many people are apt to grossly exaggerate the money made by business. So Opinion Research Corporation (an independent organization) made a survey to learn just what the public thinks about profits. Compare these guesses and yours with the International Harvester profit figures given below.

(5)(5)(5)(5)(5)(5)
Public guess on war profits . . 30.0¢
(5) I H four war year average profit . . . 4.9¢

In this survey, the average of the guesses by the public of the war-time profits made by industry was . . . thirty per cent (30%).

But in the four war years of 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945, the profits of International Harvester Company averaged only . . . 4.9% on sales. Less than one sixth of what the general public "guessed" for all industry.

For this period, the year by year per cent of profits on sales was: 1942—7.34, 1943—5.59, 1944—3.95, 1945—3.93.

Public guess on peace profits 18.0¢
(5)(5) I H four pre-war year average profit . . 7.17¢

In the four peace years of 1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941, the profits of International Harvester Company averaged . . . 7.17%. This is well under half of what the public "guessed" for all industry.

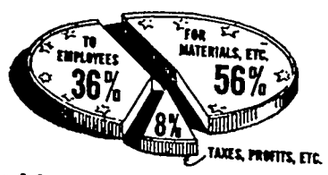
(5) FAIR (5)(5) I H (5)(0)
Majority think fair profit in normal times is . . . . . 10¢
I H ten-year average is less than 7¢

The survey indicates the public knows that in our economy profits are indispensable. And the majority regard 10% as a fair rate of profit in normal times. Many large businesses, including ourselves, would consider it a banner year if we could reach this figure. Our average profit for the last ten years—four war and six peace—was 6.43%—more than a third less than what the public considers fair.

All these figures show that our profits are not high. As a matter of fact, the entire farm machinery industry is a low profit industry. In 1944, the Federal Trade Commission published a list of 76 industries ranked in order of their ratio of profits to sales. The farm machinery industry was 57th on the list.

What About Current I H Prices?

When the War ended and we planned our peace-time production, we had hoped to be able to serve our farmer customers at the same level which has held since 1942, regardless of war-time increases in costs of wages and materials up to that time. But recent developments have forced a change in our plans.



Wages and materials nearly all of every do vester takes in from sal ernment board has reco and the Company has pay a general wage incr cents per hour for Har tory employees. The Go has also allowed price on raw materials whic chase in large quantit has had an average i 8.2%.

There has been no g crease in our prices since frozen by the Governmen 1942.

Are You Saving
Food
For The Starving In Europe?

FOODS THEY NEED MOST ARE MEAT, WHEAT, CEREALS, FATS AND OILS

In many overseas areas people live on as low as 3 calories a day. In terms of how we eat this can be explained as follows: if a person ate an average breakfast and ate no more that day, the amount of food in the breakfast would equal about 300 calories—the total daily ration of many people in Europe.

How can we make the 20 percent saving of fats and oils needed to help starving peoples abroad? Here are ways we can do it in our everyday diet!

- Buy fats and oils only as needed, so that none will waste by turning rancid.
- Stop serving deep-fat fried foods and cut down on sauteed foods, pies, doughnuts, rich cakes, cookies and mayonnaise.
- Make the best possible use of every bit of food fat, including fatty tissue of meat, fish and poultry.
- Collect "drippings" from the broiler, roaster, and frying pan; skim extra fat off the top of soup, render fat from meat tissues.

ANY TIME YOU HAVE EXTRA WASTE FAT—TAKE IT TO YOUR LOCAL BUTCHER

It seems like yesterday

It seems like yesterday that Nancy was playing with dolls. Now she's pushing her own baby carriage. Yes, there've been a lot of changes in the last twenty years—most of them so gradual we hardly noticed them at all.

Nancy didn't grow up all at once. A tooth at a time—a curl at a time—an inch at a time—and suddenly a little kid sister was Mrs. Joe Jones, mother of Joe, Junior.

Like Nancy, the use of electricity has grown a lot in the last twenty years. But the price of electricity has been going down steadily. You may not have noticed it because your bill probably stays about the same—but how many appliances have you added to your home since 1926? Actually, you're getting twice as much electricity for your money now as you did then.

Keeping electric service plentiful and cheap through years of rising costs was not easy. That today's electricity is at its very lowest price in history is a tribute to the hard work and experience of the men and women in the industry, and to its sound business management.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN FAMILY

Begins next Sunday, May 5. President Truman supports the National Family Week by declaring that the home must be maintained or democracy will perish. The church has an important place in the maintaining of the home. Therefore it is necessary that the home and the church work together.

Next Sunday is an ideal time for all parents to begin bringing their children to the Church School and the Worship services. The children will be more willing to come if their parents come with them, and take a part in worship and in the work of Christian Education. Children do understand the service on Sunday morning when they have a chance, on a par with their elders, especially those of junior age and older. Why not make Sunday May 5th, the day to bring the children to church instead of sending them alone. This will be Parents Day at Church and the Church School. Attend the church of your choice every Sunday.

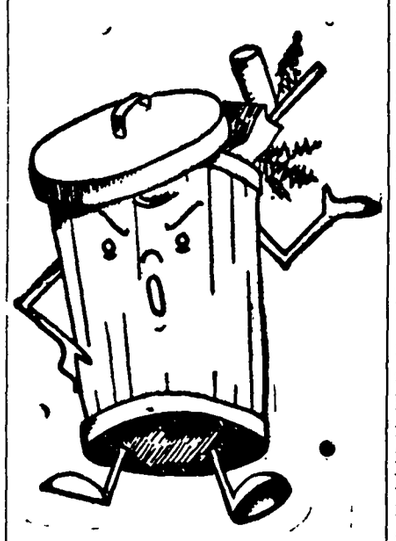
I'M FED UP!



"Oops. 'Scuse me. But I've been stuffed lately. Mrs. Waster's been putting out too big a lunch for me.

"Today it was half a dish of fried potatoes, two slices of burned toast and a piece of soaked butterscotch pie. Wish she'd change her ways of cooking. This rich food is getting me down. And goodness knows, the Waster family doesn't need it—they already strain the scales when they check their weight.

"Besides, cutting out these rich foods would certainly save a lot of fat and flour to send to those who need it in the starving areas. And it would set me back on a digestible diet."

MESERVEY PHONE NOW DIAL SYSTEM

The Meservey telephone exchange was converted from magnets to dial operation last week. This conversion was approved several years ago and much of the work was done at that time. Then came the war which prevented its completion until this spring.

This conversion was planned by the district manager, Toral S. Duckett of Le Mars, and he was assisted by group manager, Loyd Brunner of Belmond, Mike Kerr of Le Mars and equipment engineer Kenneth A. Young of Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

Mrs. Henrietta Wilkins has been the chief operator at Meservey since February, 1925, coming from Garner with her 2 daughters. Mrs. Wilkins has accepted a job in Belmond as an operator in the telephone office there.

NEED RAINS FOR SOY BEANS, OATS

Dry weather and seasonable temperatures the past week enable Hancock county farmers to complete their plowing for corn and beans and only small patches are left to be plowed.

Some planting of corn and beans was done last week but planting generally will get under way this week.

Oats and pastures look good but will need a rain shortly. Spring plowing will need rain before corn and beans will sprout.

Apple and plum trees in full bloom and no frost damage thus far. Some corn is moving in answer to the plea for food but the amount is small compared to the need. Stockmen are buying the corn for feed.

Early potatoes and onions are being planted and sugar beet planting is in progress. Soil conditions best in recent years.

REPORT MUCH POOR SEED CORN IN IOWA

Examine Tags On Bags Before Planting

Check the germination test reported on a tag attached to your seed corn, advises J. L. Robinson, Iowa State College agronomist. The test may show a germination less than normal. If it does, the planting rate should be stepped up enough to obtain a normal stand.

Early frosts last fall caught some Iowa seed corn before it matured, Robinson says. Such seed won't germinate as well as that usually planted.

Station Tests

A test made by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station in 1936 showed that when corn with an average germination of 75 and 60 percent was planted at rates of 4 and 5 kernels per hill—in comparson with a rate of 3 kernels per hill for corn of, average germination—the resulting stand and yield were practically the same.

Robinson points out that little if any corn with a germination as low as 75 percent will be offered for sale. But it is important to increase the planting rate, even with higher testing corn, if germination is less than normal.

Preserve Food!

Asparagus and rhubarb are two of the first foods homemakers think of canning and freezing.

Rhubarb freezes well and it is better to freeze it without sugar. Perhaps by next winter when it will be used the new crop of sugar will make sugar a little more plentiful.

The following directions for freezing are given by H. H. Plagge, Iowa State College: Select well formed, thick stalks in good condition. Harvest while tender before warm weather. Use stalks free from injury and decay. Trim and cut stalks about 1 inch from leaf spread. Wash thoroughly. Cut into 1½ to 2 inch pieces or longer. Best frozen raw. Do not scald. Scalded product lacks flavor. Pack into containers without sugar.

If you have had any trouble in making canned asparagus keep, it may have been some soil bacteria lurked under the little scales on the stalks. These should all be removed and the stalks again washed before canning. And remember the rule from garden to can.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Increase Conservation as Wheat Supplies Shrink; Conservatives Top Free Japanese Elections

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Casting their ballots in Tokyo, these two women were among the unexpectedly large number of their sex who voted in first free election in Japan in decade.

FOOD:
Wheat Stocks Shrink

With heavy domestic and export demands being made on the nation's shrinking wheat supply, the government mapped additional conservation measures for grain but rejected a British proposal for bread rationing by the two countries.

Current figures point up the pinch developing in wheat. Against an estimated supply of 332 million bushels, U. S. commitments for export before July 1 total 125 million bushels, the present domestic rate of consumption will take another 125 million bushels, at least 35 million bushels will be used for feed and 13 million bushels may be used for spring seed.

Use of 298 million bushels of wheat by July 1 thus would leave the U. S. with a visible supply of 35 million bushels at the beginning of the new crop year. In arriving at the current figure of 332 million bushels, agronomists added the department of agriculture's estimate of 203 million bushels on farms on April 1 with projections that elevator holdings matched last year's high mark of 129 million bushels.

In turning down Britain's bid for mutual bread rationing, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson declared that the extensive widespread production of grain in the U. S. would make control difficult. Small nations like Britain depending chiefly upon imports for their wheat can exercise more efficient check on their supplies, he said.

Relax Building Order

Farmers and workers engaged in output of essential products were made eligible for building material priorities through government relaxation of emergency housing regulations. It was also determined to provide priority assistance for the repair or alteration of existing dwellings either to maintain them or restore them to a habitable state. Builders who undertook construction of non-vet residences before March 26 may apply for priorities to complete their work.

JAPAN:
Big Vote

Following the general postwar trend, Japanese voters swung to the right in the first free elections in Nippon in a decade, with the nation's conservative parties winning sufficient representation in the 466-member parliament to assure a temperate tone of legislation.

Between 60 and 68 per cent of the 40 million eligible voters turned out for the balloting, with the women appearing in unexpectedly large numbers. With nearly half the ballots in the Tokyo district cast by women, 66-year-old Mrs. Shigeyo Takeuchi and American-educated Mrs. Shizue Kato piled up big leads.

Though running far behind the conservative parties, the Communists showed surprising strength to win a number of seats. Lacking the veteran, smoothly-oiled machines of the conservative forces, the Reds succeeded in commanding prominent last-minute notice with public demonstrations against Premier Shidehara and the existing regime. The Reds accused Shidehara of being reactionary and blamed him for the food shortage.

DRAFT:
Compromise

Heeding President Truman's insistence upon extension of the selective service act, congress moved toward continuing the draft for at least nine months but sought to reduce conscription calls by raising army and navy pay to attract volunteers.

Congressional partiality toward the compromise measure followed stubborn efforts of Republicans to suspend the draft for nine months and step up recruitments to meet requirements by raising service pay. While the compromise bill incorporated provisions for making enlistment more attractive, inclusion of draft powers assured a flow of men if volunteering fell below needs.

Under increased pay schedules considered by the solons, privates and apprentice seamen would receive $75 monthly instead of $50; private first class and seamen second class $81 instead of $54; corporal and seamen first class $92 instead of $66; sergeant or petty officer first class $115 instead of $96; staff sergeant or petty officer second class $115 instead of $96; technical sergeant or petty officer first class $135 instead of $114, and first sergeant, master sergeant or chief petty officer $165 instead of $138.

In addition, commissioned officers would receive substantial pay raises, with top ranking generals and admirals being hiked from $666 to $732.

UN:
Double-Trouble

Already pressed with the Russian demand for dropping the Iranian question entirely, the United Nations' security council was confronted with the equally ticklish Polish proposal that the international organization recommend severance of diplomatic relations with Spain.

Poland's Russian-backed complaint to the security council that the Franco regime constituted a threat to world peace came at a time when both the U. S. and Britain preferred to move slowly against the Spanish government despite their repugnance of it. Supported by France, the two English-speaking Allies desire the development of an orderly opposition movement in Spain to prevent the outbreak of another civil war if Franco is dislodged.

In protesting to the security council against Spain, Poland cited the UN general assembly's action of last February, condemning the Franco regime as having been established with axis aid and lacking qualification for membership in the international organization.

Meanwhile, the security council sweated over Russia's formal demand that the Iranian question be considered closed and neither of the two disputants be obliged to report back May 6 on the fulfillment of the Soviet pledge to withdraw from the little country without exercising pressure for petroleum and oil concessions.

With Iran opposed to the Russian demand, diplomatic circles felt that Moscow's action was inspired by its desire to avert a security council probe of the recent oil agreement reached between the two countries, in which the Reds obtained a 51 per cent stock control of a joint Russo-Iranian company for exploiting petroleum deposits in northern Iran.

Motor Power Passes Famed Horse Cavalry

Making way for the new, the historic cavalry will be merged with the comparatively new armored force into a single "armored cavalry" arm in recognition of new developments during World War II, Sec. of War Robert P. Patterson revealed.

Personnel for the new "armored cavalry" will not be drawn solely from the cavalry but also from other branches and in the same manner as it was drawn for the armored forces.

While it was planned virtually to eliminate the horse from the army, it is contemplated that a small detachment of skilled mounted troops will be maintained to give instruction and train small units for use in rough terrain, and that pack animals will be retained for specialized work.

POLES:
Shun Homeland

Apprehensive over Russian domination of their homeland, the majority of members of the British-backed Polish army in exile are unwilling to accept an offer of repatriation, a sounding sentiment among troops in Italy revealed.

The apathy of many toward returning to their native soil arises from their imprisonment in Russia after the Red occupation of eastern Poland in 1939. Prior to being released upon the formation of the Polish liberation forces after the German attack on Russia, some served two years of sentences ranging up to 15 years.

With Russian insistence upon their return to their homeland constituting a thorny diplomatic issue, many of the Poles interviewed expressed a desire to settle in Canada or Chicago, Ill., where a million Americans of Polish descent reside.

CO-OPS:
Called Beneficial

Declaring there was substantial evidence to show that the co-operative movement has proven an effective instrument for combating monopolistic control, the house select committee on small business reported that co-ops were a healthy addition to the American economy and did not endanger other forms of business operation.

Discussing agricultural co-ops, the committee said they were originally organized to help farmers offset disadvantageous bargaining conditions which still exist. Though tax-exempt farm co-ops possess an edge over competitive business in that stock dividends and reserves are not subject to levy, the actual amounts involved are relatively small, the committee said.

In considering the imposition of a receipts tax on co-ops, the committee asserted such a levy would probably raise constitutional issues and adversely affect schools, churches, scientific organizations and many social clubs with a comparable advantage of tax emption.

COAL STRIKE:
John L. Eloquent

Most eloquent of the nation's labor leaders, burly John L. Lewis sounded off in Shakespearean tones in pressing his efforts for coal operators' consideration of his demands for a health and welfare fund and safety program in a new contract for the United Mine Workers.

Insisting on prior discussion of these proposals in the face of the companies' determined opposition, John L. chortled: "For four weeks we have sat with you; we attended when you fixed the hour; we departed when weariness affected your pleasure. . . . When we emphasized the importance of life, you pleaded the priority of profits; when we spoke of little children in unkempt surroundings, you said — look to the state! . . . You scorn the toils, the abstinence and the perils of the miner; we withhold approval of your luxurious mode of life and the nights spent in merriment. . . ."

Undaunted by John L.'s heart-wrenching sally, the coal operators blandly replied that Lewis was attempting to stall negotiations and create a national crisis that would lead to consideration of his demands.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS:
Old Gives Way

As the League of Nations was officially bowing out in the shimmering marble palace in Geneva, Switzerland, French Delegate Paul-Boncour sounded a warning to the youthful United Nations that unless they agreed upon disarmament the peace machinery established in UN might come to naught.

Pointing up the collapse of the old League following the refusal of governments to abandon military forces as a potential instrument of policy, Paul-Boncour said that while UN contemplated an international organization of two million troops, a major power could raise four million unless disarmament were adopted.

The scene of intensive wrangling throughout its existence, the League breathed hard to the end, the Argentine delegation walking out upon its failure to obtain one of the last vice presidencies. Following consultations with other delegations and its own government, however, the Argentines returned.

WORLD CATTLE:

Preliminary reports for 1946 indicate that cattle numbers have decreased in North America and Europe, and increased in the Soviet Union since the beginning of 1945, the department of agriculture said.

The drop in North American cattle numbers is placed at two million, and the European decrease at six million. The increase in the Soviet Union is estimated at three and seven-tenths million. Little net change in the cattle population is reported elsewhere in the world.

NO PLAN FOR ARMY

WASHINGTON. — After the last war, we let our best officers leave the army, were content to make the army a refuge for hundreds of misfits who couldn't adjust themselves in other walks of life, and settled down to complete complacency regarding the armed forces.

Usually history repeats itself. After this war, however, there is a little less complacency regarding the future — thanks to Russia. But there is almost as much do-nothingness regarding the internal organization of the army.

President Truman has now demanded that we have a big peacetime conscript army. But aside from Secretary of War Patterson's healthy board for probing caste, no steps have been taken to reorganize the army's long out-dated system of promotions, its methods of selecting officers, and, perhaps most important of all, its system of eliminating misfits.

A thorough re-organization of the army might make it more enticing to good men and thereby eliminate conscription. Even Sen. Chan Gurney of South Dakota, most ardent conscription enthusiast, will admit that a volunteer army is more efficient than one composed of men who are forced to serve.

COULD USE HORSE MEAT

An important debate has been taking place among food experts inside the administration regarding the use of horse meat for feeding Europe.

Horse meat is a type of food which Americans know little about. Within Europe it is standard diet and certain countries, especially France and Belgium, have repeatedly informed the United States that they would like to buy more horse meat here. If two and a half billion pounds of horse meat could be sold to Europe — which is the amount available in the U. S. A. — it would take care of most of Europe's feeding problems and eliminate any need for U. S. A. rationing.

Such a program has been urged by UNRRA officials and also by some experts in the army and navy. However, the plan has run up against several snags, chiefly that of U. S. meat packers.

The big packers don't want the American public to get the idea that horse meat is processed in their plants. They fear that the suspicion would linger in the consumer's mind. However, Harry Reed, who does most of the meat procurement for UNRRA in the department of agriculture, leans toward the big meat packers and they never have wanted small state packers to get into the inter-state business.

HORSE MEAT FEEDS ZOOS

Another source of opposition is expected to come from the many horse lovers throughout the country who probably would claim that the United States was being denuded of horses.

Officials point out, however, that several hundred horses are slaughtered weekly all over the United States to feed the zoos of the nation. Furthermore, the United States today has a larger surplus of horses than ever before in history. Agriculture department estimates are that three million surplus horses are now on the ranges and farms of the country. The grain which they alone consume would go a long way toward feeding Europe.

Officials estimate that these three million surplus horses would supply a total of two and a half billion pounds of meat, also give fats for soap, together with hides to ease the scarcity of leather.

NOTE—While prices of almost everything tended upward during the war, the price of horses did not. Government buyers purchasing draft animals for UNRRA report that the country has thousands of four to six-year-old horses which have never been harnessed. Farmers haven't had time to break them in, would like to sell them if prices were right.

Veterans' SERVICE BUREAU

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D.C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Credit for Army Schools

The Veterans' administration is completing arrangements with high schools, colleges and universities so that veterans may be given academic credit on diplomas and degrees for study and technical experience acquired during wartime service in the armed forces.

For this purpose VA is using as a guide a compendium of hundreds of educational and training studies given by the armed forces during the war compiled by the American Council on Education.

School authorities may consult this guide and obtain the recommended evaluation of courses taken from the U. S. Armed Forces institute, or at one of the four overseas Army Study centers, or in any of the service technical schools, civil affairs training courses, etc.

For instance, a veteran who studied the history of philosophy at Biarritz American university in Biarritz, France, and is credited on his AGO form 100 with completion of the course, would be given by the guide's recommendation, 2½ hours toward a baccalaureate degree. In many instances sufficient credits have been earned so that a veteran forced to leave high school to enter the service, finds he may receive a high school diploma upon his return.

Questions and Answers

Q. My son received his discharge in September and the first six months in the army I didn't get my allotment or that for two minor children, one 13 and the other 8. Is there any way I can get this money? —C. E. J., Halifax, N. C.

A. An allotment to parents is not compulsory and you could get it only if the amount was deducted from your son's pay. If the two minor children are your son's children they are entitled to the allotment which every serviceman is required to pay his dependent family. Suggest you write to Chief Finance Officer, Allotment Branch, Adjutant General's office, War Department, Washington, D. C., giving son's name, serial number and all other data.

Q. My cousin was killed in the Battle of the Bulge, December 25, 1944. I would like to know in what cemetery and in what town and country he is buried.—D. D., Pottsville, Pa.

A. Write to the Office of the Quartermaster General, Graves registration, War Department, Washington 25, D. C., giving the veteran's name and serial number.

Q. I have a son who was inducted into the army in January, 1943, and was discharged the following March, 1943. Is he entitled to mustering-out pay and the G.I. Bill benefits?—Mrs. E. M. P., Decatur, Neb.

A. He is probably entitled to $200 mustering-out pay if he served 60 days in active service. He is not entitled to G.I. benefits unless he received a disability discharge, for this requires 90 days active service.

Q. I am the mother of a boy killed in action in 1944. He made me beneficiary for his insurance. I am 50 years old and get $52.80 monthly. Will I ever get any more monthly, and how soon?—Mrs. H. G., Sharon, Kan.

A. If the insurance is National Service Life and has not been converted there are two options for payment: (a) If the beneficiary is under 30 years of age at the date of death of the insured, payments are made in 240 equal monthly installments at the rate of $5.51 for each $1,000 of insurance. However, the beneficiary may elect to have the insurance payable in monthly installments as a refund life income, payable for a definite period and continuing throughout the life of the first beneficiary and in event of death of the first beneficiary the remaining installments, if any, paid to the second beneficiary or,

(b) If the beneficiary is 30 or more years of age payments are made in equal monthly installments throughout the remaining lifetime of such beneficiary with the proviso that such monthly installments shall be payable for 120 months certain. If you are not satisfied with your installments, suggest you write to Insurance Department, Veterans' Administration, at your regional office in Kansas City.

Q. My brother was killed in action in Germany, leaving a wife and one child. Several months ago her insurance checks stopped coming. We have written to find out why but have been unable to do so. Can you help us?—Mrs. J. H. R., Riddle, Ore.

A. The only suggestion I can make is that you contact, personally if possible, your nearest Veterans' administration regional offices, at the Veterans' hospital at Portland, and tell them the whole story and case history.

A well drained grass sod makes the most satisfactory run for baby chicks. The front or window side of the house should be faced south or east. The brooder house can be moved onto the range when the chicks are no longer in need of heat.

On most farms the portable brooder house will only be used during a short period of the year, at least for baby chicks. It can then be converted into range shelter or as storage for grain or supplies. The interior fixtures should be movable.

Ford Is 'Heap Perter,' Says Georgia Neighbor

RICHMOND HILL, GA.—Henry Ford, the motor magnate, looks a "heap perter" than he did when he came to his Georgia plantation, according to one of his plantation workers. Ford is now 84 years old, but he is still keenly interested in experimentation in all lines, especially crops.

"You ought to see him get around the plantation," the plantation worker said. "He'll go over to the school at recess time and all the young ones take out after him like biddies running after a mama hen. They're crazy about Mr. Ford."

As for his neighbors — well, they have found that Mr. Ford is just another farmer and that means they think he's all right.

The plantation, under management of G. F. Gregory, is experimenting with a celery crop this year. Gregory said he was putting in 14 acres of celery which should be marketable in June when celery is scarce on the market and brings a good price.

The Ford farm has 200 acres of lettuce just beginning to head up. An oyster ranch on the lower part of the plantation is producing again this year, the first time in several years since the beds were ruined by a fresh water flood.

Although he has recently sold some of his farms, Mr. Ford has maintained an interest in agricultural experiment for many years. He has helped develop many plants that could be used for rubber, for plastics, and other industrial purposes. Through the years he has continued to search for new crops and new uses for those crops.

Hoover Cutting Red Tape to Aid Famine Sufferers in Europe

By WALTER A. SHEAD
WNU Washington Correspondent
WNU Features.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S famine emergency committee, headed by former Pres. Herbert Hoover as honorary chairman, is slicing through red tape and bottlenecks in a desperate race against starvation of many of the peoples of Europe and Asia.

The people of the United States are asked by the committee to voluntarily sacrifice 40 per cent of their volume of wheat product consumption and 20 per cent of food fats and oils, so that these millions facing stark hunger may live.

H. Hoover

And Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson declares that if the American people conserve on all foods and eliminate waste, the nation can meet our present food commitments and still provide 10 per cent more food at home than was available in 1945.

But that means another record production of food stuffs by the farmers of the nation, a record that must be achieved in spite of further shortages in labor and farm machinery and another season of fertility depletion of the soil. But it is an emergency . . . an emergency which not only challenges the "know-how" of the American farmer, but every humanitarian instinct of the American people.

Feed on Scraps.

Picture if you can children with big glassy eyes, thin shouldered and old-looking, spindle-legged, with swollen stomachs, pawing through a dump heap searching for edible scraps of swill, pieces of weeks-old bread. They fall upon a prized morsel and wolf it down . . . their meal is over.

Such a scene is so commonplace in many sections of Europe, India and China that it occasions no shock or even surprise to people in these areas.

And their plight is rapidly becoming worse. Thousands of acres of food-producing lands have been devastated with rockets, bombs and tank battles and must yet be nourished back into productivity. To make the job of food production even worse, since drouths in 1945 played havoc with the crops in some nations normally self-sufficient and food exporting. Other countries under-estimated their needs or overestimated their ability to meet them.

At best, millions of children in Europe are existing on less than 2,000 calories daily. In India and China, the lucky ones get something like 1,500 calories daily, while here in America our children are consuming at a rate of 3,400 calories each day.

The agriculture secretary has named state directors of the production and marketing administration and chairmen of the county agricultural conservation committees as state and county emergency food program managers. They will enlist the aid and co-operation of state and county USDA councils. They will set specific local food conservation goals, work out locally adapted conservation measures, and marshal the forces of citizens' organizations and food trades that will help carry out the program on a voluntary basis.

Experiments Lead to Improving Hog Strains

Faster-growing hogs of superior conformation and greater livability are resulting from experiments of the regional swine breeding laboratory, Ames, Iowa, conducted by the department of agriculture and 13 agricultural experiment stations. The research involves carefully planned systems of matings in which inbreeding (the use of closely related parents) has a prominent part. The main purpose of inbreeding is to fix desirable characteristics.

Hogmen, using their farms as proving grounds, are co-operating with the scientists by testing boars produced by the various systems of breeding. Thus, far more than 500 boars from the various projects have been released to farmers, for practical tests of breeding excellence. Five breeds and three lines from crossbred foundations are represented in the research, and the degree of inbreeding in most of the lines ranges between 25 and 50 per cent and in some instances more. This degree of inbreeding is equivalent to 1 to 3 generations of continuous brother and sister matings.

Experiment station data, together with reports from farmers, indicate that mating boars from good inbred lines to non-inbred sows results in about 100 pounds more weight per litter, when the pigs are six months old, than that of litters sired by non-inbred boars of the same breeding as the sows.

Faulty Sight

Children with muscle imbalances of the eyes tend to overcome the difficulty by suppressing the visual image of one eye, says the Better Vision institute. When the muscle imbalance is severe, as in squint or cross-eyes, the shortcoming is apparent to parents. But frequently the existence of muscle imbalances in eyes of children is not readily evident. Children with eyes whose muscles fail to function properly tend to see in two directions. Because the brain cannot fuse into one the two divergent images formed on the retinas of the two eyes, the child at first sees a blurred double image, but with experience and practice tends to suppress the sensations from one eye. While this clears up vision after a fashion, the penalty may be partial blindness in one eye because of disuse. There are millions of "one-eyed" men and women in the United States.

Volcanic Eruptions

When the continents tremble with earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, the earth crust may be pushed up to form new mountains, may crack or sink to leave deep valleys. When the trembling occurs somewhere in the three-fourths of the globe that lies under the oceans, islands come and go. Perhaps nowhere is the ocean floor more generally restless than along the 1,600-mile submerged chain of volcanic mountains between Tokyo bay and Guam. The highest peaks reach above sea-level to form the Marianas, the Volcano and the Bonin islands groups and numerous individual islands. Fuming, cinder-black Uracas, 1,047-foot-high cone at the northern limit of the Marianas arc, and the 500-foot Suribachi peak where United States marines planted their flag at the southern end of Iwo Jima, typify the chain's volcanic activity.

Rayon Production

The growth of the cotton textile industry in the last 30 years is particularly noteworthy because in this period the rayon industry developed. The manufacture of rayon, a man-made fiber produced from cellulose regenerated by a chemical process, expanded dynamically in the south during the depression.

Experiments Increase Use of Farm Products

Better tire cords can be made from cotton, a valuable medicine can be extracted from the buckwheat plant, farm wastes can be used to produce alcohol, and new food products have been made possible as a result of research during the past years.

Research in the agriculture department's southern regional research laboratory in New Orleans showed that better automobile tires can be made from cotton by using varieties selected for this purpose on the basis of their physical properties. Light truck tires, made from selected varieties of cotton, and used in rear wheel positions, gave 300 per cent more mileage than tires made with regular commercial cotton. Passenger car tires made from both standard and improved cord ran nearly 70,000 miles at 60 miles an hour on highway tests with one recapping, and the carcass was still in good condition.

The buckwheat plant is being used in the Eastern laboratory at Wyndmoor, Pa., to produce rutin, a drug which can be extracted from the leaves and blossoms of the green plant and used in the treatment of conditions arising from high blood pressure associated with capillary fragility. Experimental investigations in the Northern laboratory at Peoria, Ill., indicate that from 90 to 95 gallons of liquid motor fuel can be produced from a ton of corn cobs or cottonseed hulls, and that about half of this is in the form of ethyl alcohol.

Develop Many Uses For Cheap Helium

From a laboratory curiosity costing $2,000 a cubic foot before World War I, helium has become a regulated, plentiful commodity costing about one cent a cubic foot to extract. Extraction is accomplished by cooling the natural gas to a point more than 300 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, where all constituents have become liquid or solid except helium, which can then be drawn off and compressed.

The weather bureau will continue to use millions of feet of helium annually in probing the upper air. Increasing amounts will be used in welding and other metal-working processes where the inert gas serves as a blanket to exclude oxygen and prevent undesired oxidation. In the same way, it can aid in food preservation.

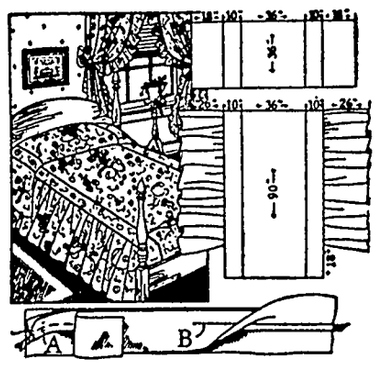
Helium mixed with oxygen forms a synthetic air that doubles the endurance of deep-sea divers and caisson workers, and reduces the painful effect of returning to normal atmospheric pressure. The same mixture is used by doctors to relieve asthma and other severe respiratory conditions.

Farm Machinery

Farm machines of all types are becoming easier to handle through the more general use of hydraulic controls for lifting tools off the ground and adjusting the depth of penetration. There are many new designs for equipment to be operated by one man. One is a field ensilage harvester with attached wagon that enables a farmer to put his corn in the silo without help. Another is a field hay chopper which can cut and chop standing hay to be subsequently blown into a silo for the production of grass silage. Or it can be arranged to pick up, chop and load dry hay out of the windrows at the rate of four to eight tons an hour. Later the hay may be blown into the barn for storage. An allied machine is an automatic pick-up hay baler which enables one man to bale as much hay as the conventional three- to four-man team. A new drier makes it possible to put hay into the mow somewhat greener than is customary.

Bedspread Can Be Cut Without Waste

YOU will need 11½ yards of 36-inch material. Cut the center parts of the spread and pillow cover first; then the 18-inch side pieces for the pillow cover; then all the 10-inch strips. This leaves a long strip for the ruffles.



These directions are from SEWING BOOK 1 which contain 32 pages packed with useful information of this sort. It shows how to make finishes such as the welted seams sketched here. It clears up the mysteries of draping a dressing table the way decorators do it, and gives tips on curtains, slip covers and many other things you can make. Garden Talks

Southern Iowa gardeners usually find it safe to plant brush and pole snap beans the first week in May. Lima beans, however, are especially sensitive to cold and shouldn't be planted until after May 15. Edible soybeans also should be planted after May 15. In northern Iowa, it's safer to wait until June 10. Bush beans should be planted 1 to 1 1.2 inches deep with the seed spaced 2 to 3 inches in the row. Allow 2 feet between the rows for hand cultivation. Pole beans are planted 1 to 2 inches deep, 4 to 6 inches between plants and rows 3 feet apart.

A small planting of an early maturing variety of sweet corn might be made the first week in May. Perhaps some roasting ears can be enjoyed by the Fourth of July, if weather is favorable The main planting, however, should not be made until May 15 or later. The seed should be treated with a seed protectant and disinfectant dust before ulanting.

Some protection from prevailing southwest winds can be obtained by planting rows of thickly planted field corn along the south and west borders of the garden. A late-maturing, tall-growing variety is recommended.

Sweet corn should not be planted close to field corn or pop corn. Both will readily cross with sweet corn, causing unevenness of maturity in the kernels. Early plantings of sweet corn should be made about an inch deep, while midsummer plantings should be one and onehalf to two inches deep.

Gardeners who want choice sweet corn for roasting ears over a period of about 2 months should make small, successive plantings of one or two varieties at intervals of 15 to 20 days until July 15. Last plantings must be made with an early maturing variety. Spread in maturity also can be obtained by planting a mixture of hybrid varieties, inculding 50 percent Iowana Cross Bantam.

It usually does not pay to grow the navy type of bean in Iowa. Invariably fall rains stain the seeds and mold may occur If the home gardener desires to grow navy beans, the Great Northern variety is consirded best Pole lima beans are not dependable in this climate. The small seeded Henderson Bush lima is the most dependable variety to grow.

HANCOCK AAA TO HELP FEED STARVING WORLD

Hancock county Triple A is co-operating in a nation wide effort to provide for the starving people of the world, and Chairman Alfred Josten will call a meeting of all civic and commercial groups in the county to assist in the program. Depots will be designated where canned food be brought. The Red Cross rooms in Garner have been made available as a center. Further instructions will be given within a few days.

The need for victory gardens this year is to gain victory over want for people abroad as well as at home.

Nile River Considered Divine by the Egyptians

Estimated to be 4,000 miles long, the Nile was considered divine by Egyptians who dedicated a temple to it. On Roda, an island near Cairo, flood waters are measured by an ancient Nilometer. This simple calibrated column of stone stands opposite the spot where, the story goes, Pharaoh's daughter rescued Moses from the bulrushes. When the Nilometer shows that the river is 25 feet above its normal level, festivals are held. When the flood exceeds 25 feet, it is disastrous rather than beneficial.

The Nile's source was a subject of scientific dispute for centuries. It is now known that the Blue Nile, originating in the Ethiopian mountains, is responsible for the flood and alluvial deposits. West of the Blue Nile flows the White Nile whose mother stream is the Kagera, a river formed by mountain streams in Tanganyika. The White Nile can be considered to start with that stream and then to flow through lakes Victoria and Albert, eventually reaching Khartoum in Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. There it is joined by the Blue Nile.

From Lake Victoria to Khartoum the Nile is navigable with great difficulty. The channel is almost obliterated by "sudd," dense plant growths which choke the waters. Downstream from Khartoum (north) as far as Aswan in Egypt, the Nile is broken by a series of six cataracts, although there are long stretches of smooth water between them. A Sudanese railway between Wadi Halfa and Khartoum carries passengers past five of the falls.

Frozen Fruits Need Only Slight Thawing

Frozen fruits need only slight thawing—just enough to separate the pieces if the fruit is to be cooked. If it is to be served raw, as in the case of berries or peaches, it is best if served while it is still the least bit icy. Thaw only as much fruit as you need for one meal. If a whole package isn't needed, cut it in two and thaw only half of it.

Thaw the food in the container. Oxygen in the air tends to darken the fruit and to destroy the fresh flavor. Allow plenty of time for thawing fruits. In the refrigerator it will take six to eight hours to thaw a one-pound package of fruits. At room temperature two to three hours will be sufficient. If the package is leakproof, the fruit may be thawed in 30 minutes to an hour if placed under cool running water.

Once food is thawed it should never be refrozen. Refreezing not only destroys the flavor and food value but causes food to spoil quickly. If fruit is left over, it should be heated for a few minutes before it is stored in the refrigerator. This is particularly true of peaches which deteriorate rapidly after they are thawed.

Industrial By-Products

Mothballs, sulfa drugs and automobile tires are only three of a long list of household and industrial goods made wholly or in part from chemicals produced in iron and steel plants. The chemicals are produced in steel plants during the process of producing coke to feed the giant blast furnaces which turn iron ore into metallic iron. Gases and volatile liquids driven from the coal during "baking" in coke ovens are recovered and refined, at least partially, right at the steel plants. In most instances the partially refined coal chemicals are then sold to chemical manufacturers for further processing, but some chemicals are produced in usable form by the steel industry itself. During 1944, for example, coal chemical plants of steel companies yielded an estimated 551,000 tons of ammonium sulfate, an important source of nitrogen for commercial fertilizers.

Bank of France

Like the Bank of England, the almost equally renowned Bank of France has been a private joint-stock institution with government-assigned authority for issuing and regulating currency. Each has been its nation's "bankers' bank," subject to special government controls. Recently, nationalization of the Bank of France has been ordered. Unlike the Bank of England, however, the Bank of France has not gradually withdrawn service for individual depositors. While carrying on its exclusive duty for issuing government-guaranteed banknotes, it spread its operations until in the 1930s it had 18 Paris branches, and offices or agents in more than 600 communities outside the capital.

Good Component

Harder than tin, but softer than zinc, cadmium is prized for its ability to work with other metals, says the National Geographic society. It teams up with them in soft solders and fusible alloys, is bonded with them in bearings and dental fillings, and shields them from corrosion by a rust-resisting plated film. Ductile and malleable, this metal can be drawn into thin wire, rolled into thin sheets, or hammered into foil. Bluish white in color, it takes a high polish. Bend a sheet of it, and it emits the characteristic crackling "cry" of tin. Its low melting point has been brought into industrial service in devices to detect and fight fire—factory sprinkler systems for example.

More About DDT

One of the early fears—that DDT would destroy too many bees which are useful as honey collectors and particularly valuable as pollenizers of crops such as legumes and fruit—has been virtually eliminated by the discovery that DDT is actually less deadly to bees than the arsenical sprays now commonly used. Bee keepers now are beginning to regard DDT as a promising relief for bee losses by arsenic poisoning. Usual objections to the new pest control have been predicated upon the contention that it would "upset the balance of nature," a theory that beneficial insects, birds and other predaters can sufficiently control insect pests. So, intensive tests of DDT are being made to determine its effect upon fish, birds, beneficial insects and other wild life. In regard to the widespread use of the chemical, it now appears for the first time as a practical control for some forest insects.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

AN ANNUAL TRIP

About this time of the year I like to go out to the Elmer Arnold farm for an evening, and that is just what the writer and Mrs. Jorgenson did Monday evening.

Prime object of the trip was to see the beautiful Russian lilacs in bloom in the Arnold yard, but we were a week early as the blossoms are not yet in full bloom. However, their many other lilacs were in gorgeous bloom and their fragrance could be detected nearly a half mile away.

I always admire the beautiful large, thick grove of trees at the Arnold farm. Many of the trees were set out by Mr. Arnold's father over fifty years ago. Elmer is a lover of trees as well as his oldest son, Wilbur, and each year they plant more and more trees around the farm. The Arnolds are great lovers of trees, and none are ever cut down. Their grove is a real haven for the naturalist as there he can find a great variety of growth.

I enjoyed taking a peek into Bruce Arnold's machine shop Bruce had left that day for the army so was not there to show me around, but his dad did a good job of "pinch-hitting" for his youngest son. Bruce's shop is really a marvel and is well equipped Bruce, by the way, is the mechanic among the boys and he likes mechanics better than farm work. He recently built a power hack saw, that looks and works like a factory-built job He has also made a lot of other time-saving devices around the farm. His shop is complete with a forge, electric arc welder, power drill press, two power drills, two power grinders and everything in the way of hand tools. Bruce plans to add a metal turning lathe to his equipment when he returns home.

Wilbur and Roy are interested in modern farming methods and raising pure-bred cattle, and the Arnold herd reflects the effort the boys have made in building up a fine herd of polled Shorthorns. Last week they went to Saronville, Nebr. where they purchased a fine polled Shorthorn bull from the Albert Kultine herd. They also have another fine animal in the herd which was the Grand Champion young bull at the Chicago exhibition. Roy and Wilbur buy only the best.

In this family story we cannot overlook the ladies of the house. Evelyn, the Arnold's only daughter, teaches in a rural school, but finds time to assist Mrs. Arnold with the housework and the many other jobs around a farm that come under the care of the women.

It was a pleasant and profitable evening for me, thanks to the Arnolds.

I AGREE WITH EARL

My good friend, Earl Hall, had a piece in his "Eye Observing" column of the Mason City Globe Gazette Friday which has been one of my pet peeves, too. Here is what Earl has to say about the so-called guest-towel:

"I verily believe I'm speaking for all men when I raise my voice against those dainty but useless bits of trivia that hang so attractively in the bathrooms of persons who are entertaining guests.

"And I want to make it clear that I refer only to the dainty and useless ones, because for the more sturdy variety we have a genuine affection. A brisk rubbing of hands and face with a sturdy and utilitarian towel brings a glow of health and feeling of cleanliness that is enjoyable.

"But those tiny, wispy, ineffectual pretties that are found in many bathrooms are a constant source of annoyance, particularly to men who visit in a strange house and who sneak a wipe on the family turkish towel rather than risk wetting or dirtying one of the divine little hankies that won't get a single pinkie respectfullly dry.

"Give us substance, ladies! Your lavendar, pink and baby blue embroidered and beflowered towels are indeed a vision to behold, but they are woefully inefficient.

"Again speaking for all men—we trust that we don't have to be firm about this."

Sweden Long Known For Quality Iron

Sweden has been noted as a producer of high-quality products for most of its 600 years as an iron-making nation. For a time, too, it was one of the leading producing countries in the world, although now it produces less than 1 per cent of world output.

The military successes of Gustavus Adolphus in the first half of the 17th century have been attributed in large part to the superior munitions produced from Swedish ore and Swedish iron. Not for two centuries afterwards was the principal reason for this superiority discovered—the chemical composition of certain of the iron ores found in Sweden.

Those ores were not only rich in iron, they were also very low in phosphorus or even almost free of that steel-contaminating element. Further, because of the lack of coal, charcoal has been widely used as a fuel for the Swedish iron industry—thus avoiding possible further contamination of the iron by sulphur.

Unsung Hero Aided in Food Standardization

Among the unsung heroes was Paul M Williams who died recently after long service with the department of agriculture as a food researchist.

To Paul M Williams the American public owes the development of U S. standards of quality for many canned, frozen and dried foods. The reason you can buy a can of grade A peaches in Dallas, Texas . . . another at Portland, Ore., . . . and a third at Boston, Mass., . . . and find them all the same in quality, though they were of three different brands . . . is partly because of Williams' untiring efforts.

Back in 1918, Williams left private business with his father to take a job with the department of agriculture, supervising the grading of fruits and vegetables for army use. He took it because it was described to him as a "war emergency assignment." By the time the emergency was over he was very greatly interested in grading and food standardization work — and he stayed on and on.

So it was that World War II found him again at army food inspection work, this time as a supervisor of a large and widely scattered group of men. He survived two world wars and then died at Temple university hospital at the age of 55. His friends say he was as much a war casualty as his son who fell on Iwo Jima.

Organize Work to Save Sewing Time

Much of the time spent sewing is wasted because of lack of organization, say extension clothing specialists. While long, uninterrupted blocks of time for sewing are the most productive, it is possible to save time and steps when sewing intermittently. The first time saver is a sewing corner, where all materials and equipment can be assembled and not need to be put away after each sewing period. A sewing corner should include a sewing machine, work table, a well-organized cabinet or box for small sewing equipment, patterns and other supplies, pressing equipment, a dress form if you have one, and a full-length mirror. Lighting conditions should be the best available with light coming over the left shoulder of a right-handed person. After the sewing equipment is arranged, the home sewer will find that these following small items are big time savers: A cabinet, box or drawer that can be placed at the side of your favorite sewing chair, to keep small tools in order and easy to reach without rummaging around. Tweezers for pulling bastings and thread ends caught under stitches or in the machine. Needle threaders for hand and machine needles may be worthwhile if you have trouble seeing the "eye."

Corn Research

At least four research projects now in progress in the other Americas to develop higher-yielding corns for use there are being aided by United States scientists. The importance of developing improved corns in the other Americas can be seen from the fact that the use of hybrid corn in the United States during 1942-45 increased production by 1.8 billion bushels — worth more than 2 billion dollars. In Costa Rica three research projects are being carried on by the food supply division of the institute of inter-American affairs, an agency of the office of inter-American affairs, by the inter-American institute of agricultural sciences, and by the Goodyear Rubber company plantation. In Venezuela two United States government specialists on corn are carrying on experimental work to develop corns of high quality. One of them is the agricultural attache and the other is a corn specialist of the United States department of agriculture.

Drink More Milk

According to the department of agriculture, the average consumption of milk and cream per person in the United States during the decade from 1930 to 1939 was less than 325 pints per person, or less than .89 of a pint per day for each individual. By 1943 milk and cream consumption reached 374 pints, the first time the American people had ever consumed more than a pint per day each. The next year this consumption climbed to 392 pints, or 1.07 pints daily. The latest department estimates are that milk and cream consumption reached another high in 1945 with 411 pints for the year per person, or 1.10 pints per person daily.

Peanut Butter

Dry peanut butter is becoming a thing of the past. Much of the peanut butter you buy today has been treated in such a way that the oil will not separate easily. That's only one of the improvements made in the manufacture of peanut butter in the last year or so. With improved techniques in the preparation of the product, it is much less likely to get rancid. Another type of peanut butter, still in the experimental stage, is one in a molded form that can be sliced for sandwiches. As a result of demands for such a product, it is reasonable to expect it on the market before long.

New Drug Effective in Cutting Malaria Danger

CANBERRA, AUSTRALIA. — A group of Australian scientists who allowed themselves to be bitten repeatedly by malarial mosquitos announced recently that a new drug, paludrine, rendered malaria no more harmful than the common cold.

Members of the group remained fit despite repeated infection, they said. The scientists said the taking of one or two paludrine tablets each weekend would give complete freedom from malarial attacks.

Hitler Never Paid Income Tax; Claimed 'Too Busy'

FRANKFURT, GERMANY.—Adolf Hitler, although one of the highest paid men in Nazi Germany, never paid an income tax because he argued that "the head of the nation should not be annoyed by such requirements," the American Military government said.

German field marshals, Nazi party officials and some of Hitler's personal favorites also dodged the payment of income taxes, the report said.

The Once Over

by H. I. Phillips

A 1956 Baby Speaks

(Apologies to Thomas Hood)

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born—
The crevices and cracks through which
The sun peeped in each morn—
The ceilings low, the shaky walls,
The fragile, lumpy floors,
The windows loose and noisy and
The tissue-paper doors!

I remember, I remember
The cockeyed shape and size—
The modernistic gadgets and
Contraptions not so wise;
The buttons all around the house
Which drove my folks berserk—
(We should have seen at sight, I guess,
The darned things would not work).

A button moved the pantry out
And put a guest room in;
We threw a darling little switch
And back it came agin!
The dining room could be made small
Or medium or large (And pressing lever Number Eight
Would make it a garage!)

I remember, I remember
My father's sad, sad tale
Of how he was a veteran
And got the home by mail;
He ordered it by catalogue
And got a G.I. loan
For 10 times what the shack was worth
But, still, it was his own!

I remember, I remember
My father always said,
"I wish I'd bought a rugged home—
Old-fashioned like instead."
One thing," he said, "a veteran
Inside his hat should paste.
'When you go out to buy a home
Don't ever buy in haste.'"

Farewell to Beer

Beer is going to be so scarce this summer that they may serve it in punch glasses and demand a letter of introduction.

It will be almost as hard to get as during prohibition. And not any easier to drink.

In fact, some pessimists are predicting that by Fourth of July it will cost you 10 cents to hear "The Stein Song" from a juke box.

It's all because of the grain that must be saved and sent to relieve the hungry in Europe. Nobody can complain when a thirst is sacrificed to such a noble cause.

But it is going to ruin the Elks picnic, the City Hall outing, and the ball games between the single and married men at Mulligan's grove.

And we predict that it will do more to arouse the general public to a hatred of war than anything so far. A beer drinker is a beer drinker, and he has never thought he was asking too much from life.

It seems to us that life is going to seem extra drab for a while to the fellow who didn't care for the hard stuff and whose only plea was: "Put a head on it, Steve!"

Now that the government has placed all those restrictions on new building we await the black market bungalow and the tie-in sales plan which makes you also take a lighthouse, two cowsheds and a houseboat.

Readin', Writin' and Drivin'. Automobile associations and educators are now starting a program in high school to teach young people how to drive an auto and particularly how to do so with a decent respect for others. "A main objective will be the development of a sportsmanlike attitude toward fellow drivers," it is announced. We hope no instructor will get into battle with another motorist en route to and from the classroom.

The idea is good, but there will be no change in the situation on American streets until somebody educates our police chiefs, traffic heads and cops as a whole so that they will give the pedestrian an occasional break.

There Is Only One Texas!

The Lone Star State

Motto: Friendship

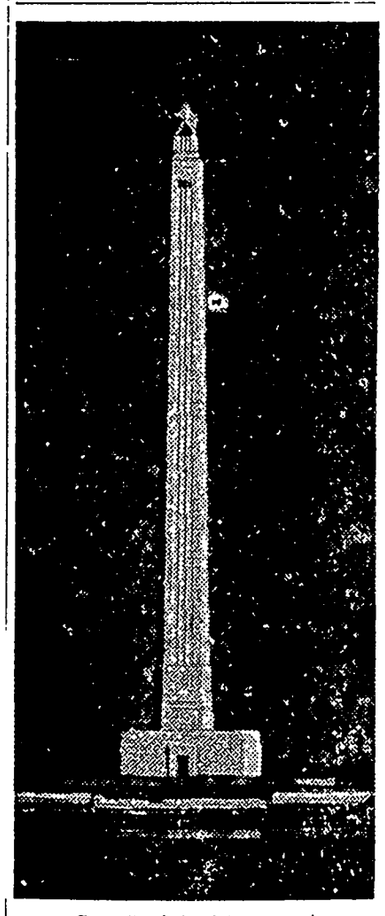
Flower: Bluebonnet

By EDWARD EMERINE
WNU Washington Correspondent.
WNU Features

"NO NATIVE has ever seen all of Texas — and no visitor ever will."

A huge, incredibly rich piece of real estate, with more cattle than human beings, and ranches described in square miles rather than acres!

Texas derives its name from "tejas," meaning friend or ally. Six great flags have flown over the state —Spanish, French, Mexican, Republic of Texas, Confederate and United States. But no one nation built Texas, or developed it. It was built by the Texans, a breed apart. They conquered it, and they made it over to suit their taste. They did it with rifles, six-shooters and bowie knives; with corn, cotton, cattle and barbed-wire; with books and Bibles, schools and churches; with sugar mills, gin mills, sawmills; with oil drills and oil refineries.



San Jacinto Monument

The first settlers found an acreage that was unlimited, soil that was fertile, a climate that was caressing, a land abundant in natural resources. So they set to work and gave Texas its traditions, its culture, its costumes and customs, its manner of speech, its swagger, its reputation. They gave it big hats, handsome riding boots, sheriffs and Texas Rangers.

Texas is a mighty empire of the southwest, a land of superlatives. It sprawls huge across the map, sniffing breezes from the Gulf of Mexico and ozone-laden air from the Rocky mountains. It has its coastal plain, its central plains, and western high plains, ranging in altitude from sea level to 4,700 feet — and peaks pointing even higher. There are 800 long miles between the semi-tropical Rio Grande and the northern border, and the greatest distance east and west is 775 miles. Water covers 3,498 square miles of Texas with plenty of dry land left. Texas has 254 counties, some of them large enough to be states!

Along the Sabine river on the east, the annual rainfall is 55 inches; El Paso has only 9 inches. Snow seldom falls in most of the state; 3 feet of it has been known in the high altitudes of west Texas. Wheat grows in the temperate north, oranges and grapefruit in the subtropical south, and corn and cotton in between. No one can predict when the "norther," a sharp, cold wind, will strike any part of the state. Nearly a million acres are irrigated, and such cities as San Antonio, Houston, Galveston and El Paso get their water from artesian wells. There are 230 kinds of fish in lakes and streams, and 4,000 different wild flowers blossom within its borders.

Between the twisted salt cedars of the Gulf coast and the desert reaches of ocotillo and sotol in the west, there are 12 million acres of commercial forests, 550 kinds of grasses and 100 varieties of cactus. There are alligators on the coast, horned toads in the desert, and rattlesnakes wherever you find them. Once 60 million buffalo grazed in Texas, and it still knows the armadillo, chaparral bird and roadrunner.

Here is a land of forest and desert, of fertile fields and jagged mountains, of rolling prairies, sleepy rivers and wide Gulf beaches. And here Texans created Houston with its 50-mile ship channel to the Gulf; San Antonio's ancient houses with yard-thick adobe walls — and skyscrapers; Dallas, the city of the north; Fort Worth, the cow town; Austin, the capital; Galveston, picturesque port and beach; El Paso, with American energy and Mexican color. It is suitable that there should be added such as Randolph field, "the West Point of the air corps," and Fort Sam Houston, the army's largest post. Oil wells have brought scores of El Dorados to the state, and Texas natural gas is piped to Colorado, Kansas, Wyoming, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Illinois. If the gas ever runs out, plenty of coal remains.

Quotations like these tell the story of Texas: "Who'll go with old Ben Milam into San Antonio?" "I'm going to Texas — to fight for my rights," a Tennessean on his way to join Texas' War for Independence. "The Americans were so stubborn that not one of them would surrender," Gen. Santa Anna. "Ride like Mexicans, shoot like Tennesseans, and fight like the devil," the Texas Rangers. "Thermopylae had its messenger of defeat; the Alamo had none," inscription. "Remember the Alamo! Remember Goliad!" Sam Houston. "The Republic of Texas is no more," Anson Jones.

GOVERNOR COKE STEVENSON
A freight wagon operator at age 16, Coke Stevenson has been banker, lawyer, county attorney, county judge, state legislator, and lieutenant governor and governor of Texas.

The shrine of Texas is the Alamo where 182 men, including Travis, Crockett, Bowie and Bonham, refused to escape or surrender. At Goliad, a Texas force under Fannin surrendered and was massacred. At San Jacinto, the furious Texans, under Sam Houston, in 20 minutes shattered Santa Anna's army and won independence for Texas.

Texas, still in cowboy boots, has its great trading centers and seaports, its flying fields and oil derricks, its mines and fields, and cattle ranges. It retains its old flavor, but combines the glories of its past with new energies and new horizons. In agriculture, industry, culture and recreation, the Texas tradition of "biggest and best" is making new strides.

There is only one Texas—it is the expansive, friendly, hospitable and progressive Texas we all know.

"Grapefruit Bowl," Lower Rio Grande, near McAllen, Texas

Pecos Bill, Super-Cowboy

It is natural that the Texas cowboy, who has known the feeling of the earth and sky while tending the herds during round-ups and drives, should create a mythical super-cowboy to talk about around the chuck wagon and the bunkhouse. That's how Pecos Bill came into existence.

There are various accounts of Pecos Bill's birth, but any puncher will declare with a great deal of pride that the hero was born in Texas. While his family was moving west, Bill dropped out of the wagon. Since there were 17 or 18 other children in the wagon, Bill's ma and pa didn't miss him for two or three days. Then it was too late to turn around and go back to look for him.

But Bill didn't starve. The coyotes —so goes the legend—"took him up and raised him." As he grew, he became so terrific that whenever the rattlesnakes heard him coming they hid in the cactus because his bite might poison them. Feeling that he needed a few pets around his shack, he invented centipedes and tarantulas. He used mountain lions for saddle horses.

Taking up a bet, Pecos Bill mounted an Oklahoma cyclone and traveled across three states. Mountains were leveled and forests uprooted.

From this jaunt there emerged the treeless Texas Panhandle. Bill was "throwed" when the cyclone "rained out from under him."

LESSON

Lesson for May 5

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

TWO BROTHERS LEARN TOLERANCE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 3:14-17; Luke 9:49-56; I John 4: 7, 8.

GOLDEN TEXT—And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also.—I John 4.21.

Intolerance is soundly condemned in our day, and we agree that the spirit which hates or hinders a man because he is of a certain race or creed is definitely wrong. Even within Christian circles we could well learn more of that fine spirit of Christ which is epitomized in the words, "no respecter of persons."

A word of caution is needed, however, lest we come to extend our tolerance to that which is sinful, wicked or destructive. One should never tolerate poison in a child's food, or in his textbooks. One does not tolerate a fire while it destroys one's house. Nor should one be tolerant of false teaching which breaks down faith in the Bible as the Word of God.

James and John were outstanding in their places of leadership for God. We learn in our lesson for today that

I. God Wants Powerful Men (Mark 3:14-17).

There seems to be an impression current in some places that being a Christian is practically synonymous with being a weak, frightened, negative person without either personality or power.

The fact is that the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ rightly interpreted, and fully received into the heart and life of a man, brings such a tremendously enriching and transforming experience that it appeals to all, including the vital, dynamic type.

These two men were "the sons of thunder"; that is, they had that flashing alertness and power of personality which made them quick to understand and decisive in action. True, it showed itself in an impatience which was wrong and a desire to bring down judgment, when they should have shown compassion, but that was power out of control, always a dangerous thing.

II. God Wants Balanced Men (Luke 9:49, 50).

Power goes to a man's head, and he needs the balance of God to keep him from going astray. Then too, strong men have intense loyalties and are not afraid to assert them, and are prone to condemn all who do not conform.

John was here exhibiting that dreadfully sectarian viewpoint which persists even in our day. To him it was not enough that a man was doing the Lord's work; he must either join their particular circle or quit. He was willing to stop a work of grace because this disciple of Christ was not in the regular group. That same spirit prevails today.

One wonders how some narrow sectarians can read the words of Jesus without blushing in shame and rushing to his feet for forgiveness and cleansing.

God wants dynamic men to work for him; but he wants them to be poised and balanced in their dealings with others, especially with the brethren.

III. God Wants Patient Men (Luke 9:51-56).

The friction between the Jews and the Samaritans dated from the time when the latter—a half-Gentile people—were denied the right to help in building the temple. That became the foundation for long and bitter strife, which showed up in such a discourteous act as to refuse a night's lodging to travelers because their destination was the hated city of Jerusalem.

Their offense viewed from another angle was far more than a bitter lack of courtesy, for they were turning from their door the Son of God, the Lord of glory.

Stubborn prejudice combined with spiritual ignorance to make this tense and explosive situation. The sons of thunder had an answer ready—let's blow them off the earth.

Simple, wasn't it? Yes, but neither right nor kind. These poor people should have drawn forth their compassion, not their hatred or a desire for revenge.

Whenever and wherever you see a man set to get revenge on another, you see a man who knows nothing of the true spirit of Christ (v. 55).

IV. God Wants Loving Men (I John 4:7, 8).

Love is not merely something that God shows toward men or inspires in their hearts. God is love. Being God, he is love, and that love is not a passive quality but an active one. He loves.

Because he is love, those who profess to belong to him are also to love one another, to love a world lost in sin, yes, to love even the utterly unlovely.

Volumes have been written on this subject, but here we must be satisfied just to state the fact and to ask ourselves the direct question, Do I manifest the love of God in my life? Well, do you?

Multiple Names

Owing to the few family names of Portuguese origin, most Brazilians use from two to four names, taking them from both their mother and father and arranging them in a new order, says Collier's. But it is their uncommon given name which distinguishes them from others and by which they are best known.

Consequently, Brazilians are listed by their first as well as their last name in many telephone directories and government files.

Are You Saving
Food
For The Starving In Europe?

FOODS THEY NEED MOST ARE MEAT, WHEAT, CEREALS, FATS AND OILS

In many overseas areas people live on as low as calories a day. In terms of how we eat this can be explai as follows: if a person ate an average breakfast and at more that day, the amount of food in the breakfast wo equal about 300 calories—the total daily ration of m people in Europe.

How can we make the 20 percent saving of fats oils needed to help starving peoples abroad? Here are w we can do it in our everyday diet!

- Buy fats and oils only as needed, so that none will waste by turning rancid.
- Stop serving deep-fat fried foods and cut down on sauteed foods, pies, doughnuts, rich cakes, cookies and mayonnaise.
- Make the best possible use of every bit of food fat, including fatty tissue of meat, fish and poultry.
- Collect "drippings" from the broiler, roaster, and frying pan; skim extra fat off the top of soup, render fat from meat tissues.

It seems like yesterday
It seems like yesterday that Nancy was playing with dolls. Now she's pushing her own baby carriage. Yes, there've been a lot of changes in the last twenty years—most of them so gradual we hardly noticed them at all.
Nancy didn't grow up all at once. A tooth at a time—a curl at a time—an inch at a time—and suddenly a little kid sister was Mrs. Joe Jones, mother of Joe, Junior.
Like Nancy, the use of electricity has grown a lot in the last twenty years. But the price of electricity has been going down steadily. You may not have noticed it because your bill probably stays about the same—but how many appliances have you added to your home since 1926? Actually, you're getting twice as much electricity for your money now as you did then.
Keeping electric service plentiful and cheap through years of rising costs was not easy. That today's electricity is at its very lowest price in history is a tribute to the hard work and experience of the men and women in the industry, and to its sound business management.

WORTHIE USHER TO RECEIVE HIS EAGLE

Rowan Youth Attains Highest Scout Rank

Almost the entire population of Rowan and friends of Scouting throughout Wright District will turn out Friday night, May 10, for the Court of Honor to be held in the Rowan high school to see two very fine young men, Worthie Usher and Carl Pesch receive the rank of Eagle Scout. This is the highest rank in Souting and is attained by only one in 200 Scouts.

The people of Rowan—all 300 of them—are proud of their troop which has been organized for only four years. It was started because Worthie Usher heard something of the Boy Scout movement and went to Klemme to learn from Scouts and Scouters there all he could about the program. Field Executive E. E. Hoisington (now Scout Executive at Clinton) was called on for help and in April 1942, Andrew Whitten Post No. 159, Amercian Legion was granted a charter giving them permission to use the program of the Boy Scouts of America for the boys in and around Rowan.

Worthie received his first Scout training in Klemme, under the leadership of P. W. "Happy" Johnson, then a Scout leader in Klemme.

TIME LIMIT ON 30 CENT CORN BONUS

All Corn Purchased Will Be Exported

"Hancock County farmers who want to get the 30-cents per bushel bonus for surplus corn should act quickly," says Alfred V. Josten, local AAA Chairman. "The campaign to buy corn for foreign relief feeding is being pushed because of the desperate need for food overseas."

The corn purchased by the Department will be (1) exported as whole grain for human consumption, (2) exported as processed meal and grits and (3) supplied to domestic processors for the manufacture of essential products approved by the Department. These products will be principally the starches needed by basic industries such as steel, textile, pharmaceutical, and paper. None of the corn purchased under this program will be used for feed.

The program will be stopped and the 30-cent over ceiling offer withdrawn just as soon as 50 millon bushels have been bought according to Mr. Josten. Reports will be made daily to the state production and marketing office and transmitted to Washington, D. C. The minute the 50 millon figure has been reached the program will be terminated.

Only corn that has actually been sold counts. That listed but not delivered when the 50 million quota is attained will not draw the bonus.

Only corn actually raised by either an owner-operator, a landlord or a tenant is eligible; and only No. 3 corn or No. 4 as regards test weight can be sold under the current program. All of the grain bought by the government at the above ceiling price will be exported.

Elevators are handling the corn for this famine emergency program. Certificates are given the seller when the corn is delivered. These certificates may be redeemed immediately at the Hancock County AAA office where a check for the ceiling price, plus the 30-cent bonus, will be written.

"Again I ask Hancock County farmers who have corn to sell to deliver their grain just as soon as possible if they wish to get the 30-cent over ceiling price," urges Mr. Josten. "By doing so they are not only receiving a top price for grain but are also helping meet our export commitments on food to starving overseas."

The Ell 4-H boys and girls held their regular monthly meeting at the Addis Greiman home Friday evening, May 3rd. The two clubs are planning the entertainment for the June Ell Township Farm Bureau meeting according to their leaders Lincoln Goll , Bernice Weaver and Ruby Schram.

Iowa Trout Season Opened May First

All trout streams in the state received a liberal stocking of trout prior to the opening of the season on May 1st. Some 60,000 legal sized trout having been stocked and more than 80,000 additional fish will be placed in the streams during the open season.

Creel census were taken on all trout streams on openingday by conservation officers with the aid of local sportsmen. The census is designed to determine fishing pressure on the various areas and findings will influence future stockings.

Cut Civilian Meat Supplies; MacArthur Affirms Purge Policy; House Conservatives Curb OPA

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Presently held by Italy but sought by Yugoslavia, strategic Adriatic port of Trieste has been troublesome bone of contention in the peace-making. During visit of United Nations commission to area, Yugoslavs staged rally demanding port and civil guards are shown dispersing straggling demonstrators with fire hose.

MEAT:
Cut Supply

Following close upon the restoration of slaughtering quotas to provide for a more equitable distribution of meat, the department of agriculture announced that civilian supplies would be lower in April, May and June than in the previous months though well above the same period last year.

In renewing slaughtering quotas, the department sought to check the heavy diversion of livestock from major packing centers by smaller operators. The big packers' inability to match smaller buyers' bids and remain within OPA ceiling prices pointed up charges that much of the meat being processed was diverted to black markets.

With 15 per cent of the April, May and June meat supply allocated to the army and foreign relief, civilian stocks will be at a rate of 132 pounds per person as against 147 for the first three months of the year. Despite the reduction, the supply still will be 16 pounds over that for the same period in 1945.

FAR EAST:
Mac Answers Russ

In answering Russian inquiries on the effectiveness of his purge of anti-democratic elements in postwar Japan, Gen. Douglas MacArthur stood by his past actions and reaffirmed intentions of continuing to carefully weed out undesirable elements from commanding positions.

Gen. MacArthur

Holding fast to previous measures, MacArthur disputed the four-power Allied council's authority to review his past administrative actions in the defeated country. He also met insinuations that he might have dealt lightly with Japanese figures in some instances by asserting that the council possessed sufficient data to study his measures and did not require copies of all directives issued.

Answering Russia's request for a new election if the recent balloting resulted in the selection of undesirable representatives, MacArthur said he could not take any action which might reflect upon any party or favor another. Undesirable elements would be removed from parliament through continuing investigations, he indicated.

CONGRESS:
Curb OPA

Demanding equal profits for all and the free play of economic forces to spur production and reduce the threat of inflation with more goods, the southern Democrats and conservative Republicans again banded in the house to curb OPA control and extend the agency's life for nine months instead of one year.

Even before house action, the bill was appreciably modified by the banking committee. Attacking OPA practice of compelling retailers to absorb part of higher manufacturing costs, the committee decided to allow them a full markup, and it also abolished the OPA regulation requiring clothing makers to balance output of cheaper and more expensive lines.

When the bill reached the floor, however, the conservative coalition went to work in earnest.

By a 209 to 189 vote, OPA's life was reduced to nine months from a year.

By 259 to 137, OPA was ordered to allow every manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer full operating costs plus a reasonable profit in fixing price ceilings.

By 241 to 182, meat subsidies were abolished by July 1.

By 245 to 150, all food subsidies were to be gradually eliminated by December 31, with compensatory price increases allowed.

By 228 to 166, price ceilings were ordered removed on all goods reaching the June 30, 1941, level of production.

Having strongly diluted the coalition's anti-strike bill, senate action on OPA was awaited in the face of urgent administration demands for preserving maximum powers of the agency to head off inflation. Senate disagreement with the house measure would require a conference between the two bodies to iron out differences.

CHINA:
At It Again

Back in China after reporting to President Truman on his efforts to end civil strife in that long-suffering country, Gen. George C. Marshall found the nationalist and communist forces at each other's throats again despite the recent conclusion of a truce.

The new clashes centered in Manchuria where the nationalists sought to seize control of key sites in the wake of Russian withdrawals. While Chiang Kai-shek's forces took over smaller strongholds, an estimated 40,000 Reds using captured Jap equipment smashed 6,000 nationalists defending the Manchurian capital of Changchun.

Marshall's appearance on the scene coincided with the resumption of discussions between the disputants for reconciling the nationalists' desires for protecting the central government's strategic economic interests in the territory with the communists' demands for political power.

UN:
Rip Franco

Alone in championing Russia's position in the Iranian issue, Poland drew stronger support in its demand that the security council condemn Spain as a threat to world peace and recommend that the 51 member countries of the United Nations break diplomatic relations with Madrid.

Russia, Australia, France and Mexico proved sympathetic to Polish Delegate Lange's charges that 100,000 Germans and Vichy militiamen were in Spain and German scientists were developing new weapons of war within the country.

Franco had answered earlier Polish suggestions that German scientists were working on atomic energy in Spain by inviting the UN to send an investigating committee to the country.

While expressing no love for Franco, the U. S., backed by Britain, China, Holland and Brazil, cautioned against hasty action in the case of Spain, reiterating its policy of giving every encouragement to the Spanish people to organize a new government peaceably without stirring another bloody civil war.

MUSK-OX:

Taking advantage of winter conditions unparalleled in the U. S., American observers at the Canadian army's arctic "Exercise Musk-ox" are making discoveries expected to prove valuable not only to the army but also to civilians living in the extremely cold winter climates of the northern United States.

On-the-spot changes in types of American clothing, food and equipment are being made and new products developed in the U. S. on observers' recommendations.

Industry Briefs . . .

While a host of new building products will appear in the postwar period as the government's housing program gains momentum, most of them will represent improved forms of old materials rather than revolutionary innovations, the trade predicts. Established building material makers are keeping their feet on the ground in pushing output of basic materials and in concentrating their efforts on the development of critical items in short supply.

WHEAT EXPORT:
Argentine Aid

In seeking to make the maximum amount of wheat available for export to help feed a hungry world, the Argentine government announced a substantial subsidy to growers and also limited the volume of purchases by millers to the last year's level.

Payment of a subsidy of over 30 cents a bushel in American terms had a double aim: first, of drawing wheat off of farms where it has been hoarded in anticipation of higher prices, and second, of stimulating an increase in acreage for the next crop.

Restriction of millers' use of wheat to the last year's levels followed failure of the government's program for voluntary reduction of individual consumption from 2.2 pounds to 2 pounds. Extravagant in their use of wheat, Argentines ordinarily demand fresh bread for every meal, discarding unfinished loaves.

Good Neighbors Make Up

Argentina's substantial shipments of wheat overseas during April drew hearty praise of Secretary of Agriculture Anderson as the U. S. prepared to resume friendly relations with the South American nation following official charges that the Peron regime was harboring nazis.

Commending the Argentine government for its full co-operation with the allies' combined food board, Anderson revealed that Argentina had exported 190,000 tons of wheat during the first half of April and had taken steps to ship an additional 200,000 tons during the remainder of the month.

As the U. S. expressed a willingness to enter into a hemispheric defense pact including Argentina provided the latter carried out commitments to obliterate axis influences, president-elect Peron acknowledged the American demands and pledged his support of the democratic cause.

New U S Striking Force

A powerful, new American air force is taking shape in Europe, built around the super B-29s and P-80 jet planes. Organized from virtually scratch after the dissolution of the wartime units after V-E Day, the new force has steadily been built up to a personnel of 50,000 highly trained men, with an ultimate goal of 70,000. The B-29s constitute the backbone of the bombing force and will operate from French and German fields while the P-80 jets are the core of a speedy fighter command based at Bremen.

EUROPE:
Sample Diet

Indicating the tight food situation overseas, the United Nations relief and rehabilitation administration listed sample diets of Italy, Greece, Czechoslovakia and Poland, with bread the foundation in all countries.

In Italy, bread, tea or coffee make up the breakfast; thin vegetable soup and bread the lunch, and spaghetti, bread, nuts and fruit the dinner. In Greece, bread, tea or coffee constitute the breakfast; macaroni with sauce of oil, garlic and a little meat the lunch, and dry beans or peas in soup, bread, cheese and wine the dinner.

In Czechoslovakia, breakfast consists of bread, ersatz coffee or tea with sugar; lunch of potato soup, cabbage cooked with potatoes and cheese, and dinner of thin cabbage soup with small bits of meat or fish, bread, ersatz coffee and a sweet. In Poland, breakfast is made up of bread, tea or coffee; lunch of small piece of meat or fish with potatoes, bread, ersatz tea or coffee without sugar, and dinner of cabbage borscht or barley soup, bread and cheese.

POLITICS:
CIO Drive

Congressional "reactionaries" were marked for defeat by the CIO political action committee in the 1946 elections as the powerful union organization drew up its battle plans and prepared to spend six million dollars on the national campaign.

While the PAC's high command headed by Sidney Hillman and Philip Murray will co-ordinate national activities, local CIO organizations will select their candidates. Besides hustling out the vote of union members and sympathizers, local groups will distribute pamphlets and other literature outlining the CIOs liberal legislative program and indicating how congressional incumbents voted on it.

Hitting "poll tax Democrats and reactionary Republicans," the PAC struck at opponents of extension of OPA; the 65 cent an hour minimum wage; housing subsidies; federal health insurance; the fair employment practices act, and the abolition of the poll tax.

Palace Available

Dissolution of the League of Nations after an existence of a quarter-century raises the problem of utilizing its palatial headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland.

Erected at a cost of about 10 million dollars, the palace of the League of Nations required seven years to build and was completed only 10 years ago. At the height of the league's activities, the palace's 700 rooms housed about 850.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND
DREW PEARSON

RUSS DON'T LIKE U. S. A.

WASHINGTON. — Inside reason why the Russians are pulling wires to have the capital of the United Nations moved back to sleepy Geneva is that American public opinion has been too powerful a champion of the smaller nations.

So the Russians have been working behind the scenes to corral votes in favor of the Geneva transfer and can count on Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland and France. However, they can't count on the British, who once favored a European capital, but are now 100 per cent sold that American opinion is one of their best allies.

The Russians also can't count on the Latin Americans. In the old days, Pan - American diplomats loved lolling in Paris most of the time and turning up in Geneva a few days of the week. Today, however, Paris is one of the most uncomfortable places in the world, Geneva is short of food, and New York is far more pleasurable.

The Russians, who originally favored an American city as the U. N. capital, now consider this a serious mistake. They dislike the fact that American newspapers publish columns and columns of front-page news on every move made by the Russians, and they figure that American newsmen at Geneva would sit drowsily in the Swiss cafes drinking beer, or spend week-ends in the Swiss Alps.

In Europe, they also believe, no photographer or newspaper would have the energy to trail Ambassador Gromyko on his famous and circuitous trip around New York City when he almost stopped in at the Security Council meeting, but didn't.

If the Iranian question had been discussed at Geneva, instead of New York, the Russians figure, it never would have attracted so much attention and the Soviet would have come off with a complete victory.

NO ARMY RACE PREJUDICE

A Negro, former master sergeant in the army, Marion F. Green, testified before General Doolittle's "caste system" board the other day, that there was little evidence of racial prejudices and discrimination in the army. When General Doolittle inquired about this, Sergeant Green replied:

"Colored soldiers found some resentment against them when they first joined the army, but this was quickly ironed out after a few months of training. In February, 1941, we had some fights and riots while I was stationed at Camp Livingstone, Louisiana. However, by the time we finished training, everybody was getting along fine. I encountered no racial bias whatever overseas."

The ex-G.I. also suggested that saluting of officers be optional when enlisted men are off duty and off the post, to which Lt. Gen. Troy Middleton, now an executive of Louisiana State university, countered: "Wouldn't optional saluting such as you propose tend to tear down discipline?"

"Not necessarily, general," replied Green. "If a man does something to merit respect, he will get that respect whether he is a civilian or an army officer."

POWER AND NYLON LOBBIES

Many congressmen will vote against dynamic Speaker Sam Rayburn in a secret committee session, but don't have the nerve to stand up and oppose him on the floor of the house. Very soon, however, Democrats who have fallen for the beguiling promises of the giant power lobby are going to face the latter test.

Sam Rayburn really has fire in his eye when he talks about the power lobby. And today that lobby ranks with the real estate buttonholers as one of the most potent on Capitol Hill, has even gone to the extent of dangling nylons before the wives of congressmen in order to win votes against the government's southwest power authority in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and southern Missouri.

The question at issue is whether the government can construct its own electric lines to distribute electric power from the Denison dam on the Texas-Oklahoma border and the Norfolk, Ark., dam. Without such power lines, the government merely generates the power but can't sell it. The power lobby wants to prevent this sale.

So far, the power lobby's technique has been successful with the appropriations subcommittee, which knifed the construction of the distributing lines. Cong. Ben Jensen of Iowa, Henry Dworshak of Idaho, Robert Jones of Ohio, and W. F. Norrell of Arkansas were the gentlemen reported to have fallen for the wiles of the lobby.

However, when the bill comes out on the floor of congress, Sam Rayburn, together with the dean of congress, Adolph Sabath of Illinois, plans to stage a real battle.

Adjournment of Congress Will Give Breathing Spell

WITH the Easter recess out of the way, as things are shaping up now, congress may adjourn about August 1 to give its members a chance to build their political fences for the November elections. All representatives and a third of the senators must face the voters this fall.

It may be a good thing, for with congress in recess until after the first of the year, the nation can get down to work for real production without the disturbing influences of proposed legislation in the immediate offing.

Furthermore, everything congress has tackled this year has been approached from the political angle. The members have been loath to take a stand on any controversial subject which might change a vote one way or another. As a result, the administration program has been hamstrung . . . continuation of social reforms has been delayed and domestic legislation has been pigeonholed, made innocuous or just held in committees without action.

Between now and August 1 important things may be expected to happen. President Truman's popularity, at bottom as he finished his first year in office, will be on the upgrade from now on. Increased production of consumer goods, holding the line on inflation, relaxing of price controls from time to time as scarcity of goods eases, continued heavy demand for farm products at good prices, and a generally satisfying foreign policy, all will tend to make for greater good feeling toward the President. The low point was reached during the senate hearing on the Pauley nomination.

Little Drastic Legislation

Congress will extend the draft with curtailments on age limits, no fathers, increased pay and shorter service; the veterans housing bill may become law, with some subsidy included, and price ceilings on new homes, probably not on existing homes; the President's peacetime military training bill likely will not be enacted this year. There is every likelihood, despite the President's demand and his castigation of navy lobbying, that the army-navy merger will not ve voted, at least until after congress reconvenes. In spite of opposition of the farm organizations, food subsidies may be extended until January 1st; OPA will be continued but with great trimming of its power. The Pace bill making farm labor a part of the parity price likely will not get through the senate although it has been passed twice by the house. The minimum wage bill, meaningless in its present form with the Russell parity amendment, will be vetoed, as announced by the President.

Another fair employment practices bill, beaten in the senate by a southern filibuster, likely will come up in the house but will not get far. Amendments to the social security laws may not be considered and neither will various health measures, such as a compulsory tax for doctors and hospital bills. There may be some additional appropriations for public health and hospitals in federal grants to be matched by the states. The fifty million dollar school lunch bill passed by the house likely will be upped in the senate to provide more money, up to a hundred million.

The power lobby has effectively bottled up the various regional authority bills for the Missouri valley, the Columbia river valley and others, and in all probability there will be no vote on any of these measures this year.

Will Approve British Loan

Our guess is that the British loan will be given congressional approval after some of the opposition congressmen get their spleen on the question out of their systems.

And there's another important measure, one which the President has several times pointed to, and that's the matter of Presidential succession. President Truman is planning a trip to the Philippines on July 4 . . . he is planning other forays about the country, but he appears to be a healthy individual, so the congress will probably let action on this legislation slide also, in spite of the uncertainty which now exists over legal succession to the Presidency.

There is a rash of labor reform bills and some in mild form stand some chance of passage. But most assuredly there will be no drastic anti-labor legislation before the elections in November. That would indeed be fool-hardy from a political standpoint.

In the meantime there are rumors around Washington that Sec. Clinton Anderson will resign his job as head of USDA. From all the information, however, that your Home Town Reporter can obtain, the secretary will not resign, although he probably does feel like it.

E'S LITTLE PEOPLE — 1946

ed German Family Lives Amid Ruins of Famous Castle

By PAULINE FREDERICK
WNU Foreign Correspondent.

ERNBERG.—In 1938, in a humble home in the shadow at castle, a little German girl was born. Her name was Strobl. I saw Hertha today as I stood in the biting win- on the hill that commands the ruins of the legendary er city of Nuernberg. Hertha had run out of the sham- the castle to ask me for chewing gum. I couldn't help g her back. That's how I found out that a lot of things appened to her in eight short years.

Hertha was born she had rear-old sister. The simple me was on a narrow street t of the castle in the quaint hose walls and towers once on Christmas cards the er, and where Albrecht ed and painted. But there r things going on in Nuern- en Hertha was born. An by the name of Julius had started here a fire of ism that was sweeping y Hertha's father had to humble job as a packer l supplies and go to the front as a soldier. But Her- too young to know much Soon after the days ry tales came to an end. ld me about them in the the place where they are th her mother and sister word now and then. The a little three-room gate- lt into one of the towers dle wall which miraculous- in the bomb-shattered er the doorway there is a to-etched into the stone 1561. Roughly translated "There is nothing greater ired than to deserve well state."

's sister was sitting at the peeling potatoes and her tood beside the little stove there was a pot of cab- king. The two small rooms across the back of the held single cots with eds. The windows opened shattered spires and tow- e old city below. A crude, heel doll carriage with a in it held a place of honor e spare neat furnishings. s no heat in these rooms. rs came to Hertha's eyes she were angry when she the time she was in the when a bomb struck it. day when she was back e great horns sounded her mother hastily took her sister to the basement of their home. When great blasts shook the house, Hertha said in her childish German, "I thought I was going to be dead." When the bomb- ing stopped and they came up to look around, there was no longer any Strobl house — there were not many houses at all left in the city. Even the greater part of Hertha's beautiful castle was in ruins. But what broke her heart most was that her precious doll and doll carriage were gone.

Frau Strobl took her two daugh- ters and went to an air-raid shelter nearby to live for a while. That was 50 feet down in the ground and in a concrete room where there was only electric light and no heat. When Herr Strobl came back from Russia, he found the little gate- house at the castle and the family moved in there, but there are still a lot of others living in bunkers.

Hertha and her mother and sister were warmly dressed in heavy clothes that did not look worn and they had on leather-soled shoes. Like many Germans in this sector the appearance of the clothing is good, and there are any number of furs, especially red fox, here in Ba- varia. But these are the last of the clothes — there is little or noth- ing to change to. However, children under six are permitted one pair of shoes a year.

But if Hertha's mother was en- deavoring to make ends meet, there was one thing that Hertha was hoping with all her heart would be changed soon. Last Easter there was no candy, but just before Christ- mas there was a small allotment and this Easter there probably will be some. I asked Hertha what she wanted to do when she grew up, and without a moment's hesita- tion she said,

"Keep a chocolate shop!"

There was one other question I was interested in putting to this lit- tle German girl. The names of the prisoners in the dock of the Inter- national Military tribunal outside the walls of the old city did not mean anything to her, although she said she had heard of Julius Streich- er. She had never seen any of the Nazi leaders. So I asked if her teach- er were to tell her to draw a pic- ture that represented war to her, what she would draw. She thought for a minute and then she said firm- ly,

"I would draw a castle and houses —and the houses would all be bombed."

And probably she would include in the destruction, a doll carriage with a doll in it. A little girl of tender years who knows the true meaning of war.

There is more in the American zone — in all four zones in Ger- many — to take care of than just seeing that there is enough food and housing and clothing for the people through the winter. There is a lot of wrong thinking that has to be taken care of, too, and that care has to start with the youngest who has never lived under Naziism. The planter of this harvest of hate may be dead, but the tares he sowed still could choke out the good seed.

I wanted to put one more question to these young Germans. I asked them if they didn't dislike the Brit- ish and Americans for all the de- struction that had been done to Nuernberg. Somewhat like little par- rots they said in unison, as though they had said it before:

Bought Alabama Farm in '39; Has Mortgage All Paid off Now

FLORENCE, ALA.—They all said Louis Olive could nev- er get out of debt if he bought that old 120-acre farm in the Fairview community. But he bought it anyway, back in 1939, and the mortgage is now paid off!

Mrs. Mabel Anderson, associate farm security administration super- visor, recently told Mr. Olive's story in an article published by the Flor- ence Herald. She wrote:

"In July, 1939, Mr. Olive filed an application with the FSA for a loan to purchase a farm, a farm that had been under mortgage for the past 43 years. A loan of $4,080 for purchase of the land and construc- tion of a house and other buildings was granted.

"The year before the purchase, only 22 acres were in cultivation, 7 in cotton and 15 in corn, but dur- ing the first year of Mr. Olive's own- ership he terraced the farm, plant- ed 13 acres in soil building crops, cleared a good portion of the land to get in a fairly good crop and put out a nice orchard. The plan called for a "live at home" program and this was followed always with a sur- plus produced for market.

"This year, when food has been a problem, the Olives have 1,450 pounds of meat, 500 quarts of canned fruit and vegetables, 200 bushels of potatoes, 10 bushels of sweet potatoes, 1 bushel of dried fruit and plenty of milk and eggs. Besides food for home use they have 600 bushels of corn, 17 tons of hay, hogs for another year, 4 cows, 5 heifers, 150 leghorn hens and 3 head of work stock.

"Plans have been made for an- other year by planting 4 acres in clover and rye, 10 acres of vetch, and 8 acres of hay, according to soil conservation plans.

"Howard Olive, the oldest son, has studied vocational agriculture at Central high school and with the aid of his teacher has landscaped the home and is maintaining the grounds as part of his school pro- gram."

Name Your Price And You Can Buy Alien Properties

By WALTER A. SHEAD
WNU Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON.—James E. Mark- ham, alien property custodian, has a job for the government which is probably one of the most varied in the world . . . he sells patent li- censes . . . he operates farms, for- ests, camps, apartment houses . . . he operates a 69-million-dollar film company . . . he is a detective, cor- poration operator, wine dealer, rent collector, custodian, collector of roy- alties, diplomat, and has taken over household possessions and personal property of aliens in the U. S.

How about buying a farm? Just name a price in a sealed bid. These farms are scattered all over the country. The custodian has over 46,- 000 acres of rural lands. Included in these tracts are 24,800 acres of agricultural land valued at $475,- 000; 460 acres of extractive and oil lands valued at $111,000; 14,070 acres of wooded lands at $88,000 and unimproved land, 6,290 acres, val- ued at $12,000.

There is some concentration of these lands along the Pacific coast and the middle Atlantic states. For instance, 70 parcels are in Californ- nia, 33 in Texas, 61 in Missouri, 24 in Ohio, 33 in Pennsylvania and 75 in New York state.

The alien property custodian has vested rights to total real estate holdings in this country, including both rural and urban, valued at $3,- 622,000. The custodian employs real estate brokers to collect rents, which at the end of the last fiscal year totaled $174,000. He is dispos- ing of the property as expeditiously as work of preparing for sale can be completed and purchasers found.

The custodian recently sold real estate owned by the German-Amer- ican Bund, consisting of several parcels of real estate comprising some 200 acres, for a boys' camp.

Cliff and Mary Rowland and John and Marion Lawson, two Bronxville, N. Y., married couples, wanted to learn to fly, so they took lessons during their two weeks' vacation. LEARNING TO LIVE TOGETHER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:15-17; 21, 22; Mark 10:35-45.

GOLDEN TEXT—By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.—John 13:35.

One world! Men have discovered in recent years that we do live in one world and that we must learn how to get along with one another, or we may find that we have de- stroyed civilization and one another.

God has always taught in his Word that all men are of one origin, and that despite their differences, they are to live in unity and peace. That would have been blessedly true if men had obeyed God and his law. Sin brought division and confusion.

Now in our day, when we should be far on the way to the attain- ment of God's purpose, we find men more inclined than ever to be sus- picious of one another, grasping in their desires and purposes, and evil in many of their ways.

We have not yet learned to live together as nations. Let us set our- selves to the task of living together.

I. A Method for Dealing with Dif- ferences (Matt. 18:15-17).

This is the God-prescribed meth- od for dealing with personal prob- lems in the Christian church. That body in which love should reign is often rent by jealousies and person- al resentments. If permitted to run on unchecked, they create division and even strife before the world, with all the disgrace it brings on the cause of Christ.

Such matters are to be dealt with promptly. The aggrieved one is not to wait for the sinner to make the approach, but is to go to him and place before him the evidence of his guilt. Done in kindness and with tact, this is frequently all that needs to be done. A man may thus win his brother, with no fur- ther ado or fuss in the church.

If he proves stubborn, the next step is to bring some brethren along and talk it over again. This evi- dence of their concern may break the stubbornness, or their prayers may win him. And if it does not work, the things said and done will have been witnessed by brethren who can faithfully report them to the church.

The final step is to bring the err- ing brother before the church. Now he may see the seriousness of his offense and repent. If not, there is one plain duty; he is to be put out- side of the fellowship of the church.

Does that mean that he is aban- doned and forgotten? Certainly not. He is to be "as a heathen man and a publican." Does the church have any interest in such indi- viduals? Indeed it does, for the pri- mary business of the church is to win both heathen and publican to fellowship with Christ.

II. A Measure for Determining Forgiveness (Matt. 18:21, 22).

Peter's question was a practical one. He supposed the case of one who sinned repeatedly against one who had shown a forgiving spirit. Most of us need not suppose such cases; we have them before us.

We forgive and are ready to let it all be forgotten, when lo, the of- fender turns up with an even greater wrong, indignity or sin! Then there is weeping and appar- ent repentance, followed almost at once by another offense.

How long is this business to go on? The Jews said, "Three times, then let judgment fall." Peter, being a follower of Christ, went much farther. He would forgive sev- en times. Well, that's a lot of for- giveness; let us recognize that. Most of us haven't even gone as far as the Jews, and Peter is way ahead of us.

But it is not enough! Forgiveness which has any limit set on it is not forgiveness at all. The very genius of forgiveness demands that we do not stand there with a measuring line or an account book. It must be from the heart, without limit and without restraint.

III. A Means for Attaining Great- ness (Mark 10:35-45).

To want to be truly great for God is certainly not a sin. In a world which was rejecting Christ and get- ting ready to crucify him, this moth- er wanted her two boys to have a place of honor in the service of Christ. So far, so good; but then came the thing which spoiled it all —selfishness.

To seek honor for oneself, or for those one loves in order that the ego might be inflated and self given a chance to show off, that is definitely unchristian.

If then it is right to seek proper greatness, how may it be done? Verses 43-45 tell us. It is by way of sacrificial service, the denial of self.

This world and its kingdoms say that the one who serves is inferior to the one who is served. In the kingdom of Jesus it is the one who serves who is greatest.

Where will such a path lead? For Christ it led to the cross, and be- yond it the victory of resurrection day. It may mean death for us, for a real willingness to serve connotes a willingness to give all, even life itself, for his glory.

Household Hints

A bird house with a hinged roof makes an attractive clothespin box when attached to a clothesline post.

Never crowd the rinse tub. Clothes must move freely under water to get the soap out. Also lift each piece of clothing up and out of water when rinsing clothes. Otherwise dirt in the soiled water remains in the fabric.

Never set a vase or bowl of flow- ers in a draft. If you do, they will soon wilt.

Apply Calyx Apple Tree Spray In County Now

The calyx spray is applied on apples and pears just after the petals have fallen. If rainy, spray when 90 percent of the petals have fallen. On plums and peaches, the husk that surrounds the young fruit should have fallen. This time coincides with petal fall on apple. See card for materials.

This spray is important in controlling both major injurious insects and disease on all of these fruits. Be sure to spray non-bearing trees too.

There is an excellent crop of peaches, plums, cherries and pears in prospect. Apples are spotted with some trees full of bloom and others light.

Ask State To Observe Food-For-Famine Day

Sunday, May 19, has been named Iowa Food-for-famine Sunday by Gov. Robert D. Blue. "This day has been designated as a day of solemn prayer and thoughtful restrospection with the hope that needed food may be diverted to hungry peoples," states Iowa's governor.

"Just as our sons and daughters accepted the call to war, so must Iowans now accept this great humanitarian responsibilty," continued the govenor in making the proclamation. "The world looks like its leading agricultural state for help.

"I therefore ask the citizens of this great commonwealth to cooperate to the limit of their ability in the Food-for-famine," said Governor Blue. "I fully realize the fine work that has been done and is being done, but efforts must be redoubled."

STUDIES SHOW MILK CAN BE REDUCED FOR CALVES

Iowa State College dairymen recommend the "limited milk" plan for feeding dairy calves as one of the best ways to conserve needed milk supplies.

Calf studies made at the college show that calves will do as well on grain and limited milk as they will on so-called substitutes or gruels.

Their advice to dairy farmers is to feed calves the best available grain, starting the feeding just as soon as the calves are interested. The milk ration can be cut down every few days, and by the time the calves are eating from 2 to 3 pounds of grain the milk probably can be eliminated entirely. A poor-doing calf may need the milk ration longer than the others.

The dairymen suggest the following grain ration for the weaned calves: 4 parts of ground corn or corn and cob meal, 2 parts of ground oats, 2 parts of bran and 1 part of soybean or linseed meal plus 1 percent salt. In addition, the calves should get some grass or legume hay.

Poultry Raisers Save By Culling Out Old Hens

Ralph Baker, Iowa State College poultry marketing specialist, says that for 200 central western primary markets, 3½ times as many old roosters and about 1½ times as many hens were being sold during the third week in April as in the same week a year ago. Figures were supplied by the United Staes Department of Agriculture.

Paul Henderson, Hancock County Extension Director, pointed out that every old rooster kept around the farm just to keep the hens company costs the farmer around 7 pounds of feed each month. The same applies to non-laying hens. This feed can be used to a much better advantage if fed to the producing hens and young stock.

Unless eggs are being sold to hatcheries, all the old roosters should be sold or canned. So should hens with pale faces, shriveled and dried combs or wattles. Yellow beaks also indicate the hen is on vacation.

The United Nations flag, also called the Four Freedoms flag, has four vertical red bars on a white field and is intended to fly alongside the flag of the country in which it is displayed.

Plant carrots and beets in late June or early July for storage.

I'M FED UP!

"Just can't keep the tears back—got such an ache in my lining. I had a taste of burned fat today.

"Know what Mrs. Waster did? In the first place she was making French fries that take fat needed overseas for those starving people. Then, on top of that, she had the pan too full and the blaze too high. The fat caught fire. Good thing she had sense enough to turn out the flame. She didn't get hurt but the fat did.

"It's no wonder I have an ache in my lining. Decomposed fat plus soaked French fries isn't a good diet. I get awful pains, too ,when I think of those 2 lbs. of fat wasted when 1 teaspoon of fat a day saved by everyone will mean 1 million pounds of fat saved. Goodness! Mrs. Waster alone wasted 96 teaspoons."

Soy Beans Make First Rate Weed Killers

Soybeans, in addition to providing feed, protein and oil, are effective as a smother crop for such perennial noxious weeds as Canada thistle, quack grass and bindweed, says Paul Henderson extension director.

More than 1 year is usually required for eradication, but no crops are lost in the process.

Low-producing areas or those abandoned because of serious weed infestation can be brought back into production by sowing soybeans to kill the weeds. Soybeans will leave the land in good condition.

The ground upon which the soybeans are to be grown should be plowed when weed growth starts in the spring. Then at succeeding 10-day intervals, or whenever the new weed shoots appear. Henderson advises cultivating with a surface cultivator or springtooth harrow. About June 1 plow again, prepare a firm seedbed and drill inoculated soybeans the same day at the rate of 3 bushels per acre. Harvest the crop at the usual time, then plow immediately and resume following operations.

On slightly rolling ground, soybeans should be drilled in on the contour. To futher avoid danger from erosion, the soybeans should be harvested so that rye may be seeded as a cover crop in September. The rye should be plowed under the following spring and the area again seeded to soybeans. On extremely rolling ground, fallowing and soybeans are recommended.

Two Deer Seen Around Titonka Last Few Days

Two deer have been seen at various places in the Titonka neighborhood the past few days. Wayne Miller saw them out towards German Valley one day recently, and at another time they were seen on the George Higgins farm east of town. Monday p. m. Donald Boeskholt, who works for Pete Callies, said they were on the Callies farm, and he was within a few rods of them, and they did not appear very wild. Different ones have told of seeing them jump fences here and there, and said it was really a nice sight to watch them.

Panicky Selling Of Livestock Not So Good

Iowa State College farm economists warn aganst "panicky" selling of livestock breeding stock in the face of feed shortages. The economists point out that there is still a great demand for meat and other livestock products. Feed can be conserved by marketing hogs at lighter weights and selling cattle with less finish. Every effort should be made to maintain a high level of breeding stock.

Disease And Parasites Biggest Feed Wasters

Disease and parasites are two of the biggest feed wasters Iowa farmers face each year. This year all farmers should wage their own private wars to whip both enemies.

Complete separation of baby chicks and the laying flocks is the best insurance against the spread of poultry disease. Chicks should be on clean ground and the laying flock confined.

Clean ground also is a primary weapon in the fight against hog diseases and parasites. And few farmers this year will want to risk an attack of hog cholera by not vaccinating their herd.

For medium width rows seed soybeans at the rate of a bushel an acre. Solid drilled beans require 2 bushels an acre.

DITCH CONTRACT LET BY BOARDS AT GARNER

H. C. Young of Monroe was awarded a contract to clean the open ditches by the joint boards of supervisors of Kossuth, Hancock and Wright counties at a joint session held in Garner on Thursday afternoon.

Young was low among several bidders bidding $1,335 for the work. The joint boards elected Supervisor Penn Eskels of Britt chairman of the meeting and Fred C. Missal, Hancock county auditor as secretary.

The boards also ordered a 3 percent assessment spread against the district to defray expenses of the cleanup.

Butter Trouble Slated To Hit In Iowa

Butter shortages will hit Iowans as well as the rest of the American public as a result of the recent government set-aside order.

That was the prediction of Julis Brunner, Osage, Iowa, president of the Iowa Creameries association, and Frances Giblin, Ossian, Iowa, president of the Iowa Creamery Operators Association, at a conference of officers of the 2 groups at Waterloo Wednesday.

"The government set-aside order for 20 per cent of the creamery butter not only takes that additional amount of butter away from the limited output being made," they said in a joint statement, "but it will force more creameries into selling their butterfat to the cream markets since the OPA continues to hold butter prices under ceiling while prices for butterfat for cream is not."

Iowa creameries are selling more of their butterfat to cream buyers every day, they reported, with some of them cutting production to a point where they serve only their farm patrons from whom milk and cream is purchased.

6-POINT PROGRAM TO STRETCH FOOD

Government Act To Make Grain Available For Use Abroad

On a wide front Iowa communities are speeding up their efforts to conserve food to make supplies available for relief shipments abroad, reports R. K. Bliss, director of the Iowa Agricultural Extension Service, who is directing the food emergency activities of Iowa Agricultural Extension Service.

Food-saving and food-conservation activities on the local and state levels are backed by the action being taken by the federal government to stretch food supplies. Most recent action is a six-point program to make supplies available for foreign shipment.

This program, Bliss says, requires flour millers to reduce their production of flour for domestic consumption to 75 percent of the quanity distributed in the corresponding months last year.

Limit Use of Wheat

At the same time food manufacturers are required to limit the use of wheat in the manufacture of products for demestic human consumption to 75 percent of the quantity used in the same period last year.

The third point in the program limits millers to 21 days' inventory of wheat.

The corn-purchase program is a part of the emergency food set-up. Farmers are being paid a bonus of 30 cents a bushel for corn sold to the Commodity Credit Corporation. And wheat farmers also will receive a 30 cent bonus on wheat sold the government for shipment abroad.

Also in the program is the offer by the government to buy unlimited amounts of oatmeal from millers.

These measures, Bliss points out, result from the dire need of obtaining food for relief feeding. They are a part of the whole program all Iowans are being asked to support.

Self-Rationing Will Help Food Program

There is sufficient food in America to feed thousands of hungry people in Europe and Asia. We can do it, only as every family cooperates in a self-imposed "Save and Conserve" program, states O. L. Thorson, chairmen of the Kossuth County U. S. D. A. Council.

The Kossuth County U. S. D. A. Council has this past week sent letters to all organized groups in the country urging their cooperation. Some of the specific recommendations made were as follows:

1 Reduce consumption of Wheat products, fats and oils in the home.

2 Substitute in the diet more potatoes, fresh fruits and vegetables.

3 Continue to grow a good garden this year.

4 Do not hoard and discourage others from hoarding.

5 Serve and conserve by using all food prepared.

6 Cut down on the amount of food served for lunchings between meals.

Tractor Needs More Care In Dry Weather

Recent dry spring weather has created an operational hazard which can easily reduce the newest farm tractor engine to a heap of junk in a few hours, warns Dale Hull, Iowa State College agricultural engineer.

Farmers should take special pains to clean the air cleaner on their tractors daily when dust is heavy. Neglected air cleaners cause rapid ring, valve and cylinder wear which invariably results in a high rate of oil consumption.

Inoculate Beans For Best Yield, Quality

Soybean inoculation is a job that takes little time and no money. But failure to inoculate may be costly at harvest time, especially if the soybeans are sown on soils low in nitrogen, say Iowa State argonomists.

An increase of 31 percent in yield was obtained in one Iowa experimental test as a result of inoculation. The inoculation also increased the protein content of the beans by 11 percent and the amount of oil produced per acre by 24 percent.

In terms of dollars and the value of inoculation could be from $6 to $10 an acre. The cost of inoculant probably wouldn't exceed 20 cents, so soybean growers have everything to gain and nothing to lose, the argonomists point out.

Failure of soybeans to respond to any but the heaviest applicatons of commercial fertilizers makes it especially important to let them obtain their own supply of nitrogen from soils low in this fertilizer element.

LAST HALF OF MAY BEST TIME TO PIANT DAHIIAS

Iowa flower gardeners will have best succes with dahlias by planting them from May 15 to June 1 in a light type of soil, says Larry Grove, Iowa State College horticulturist. Stakes are needed to support the flowers and should be placed at the time of setting the tuber.

Whole tubers should be planted and spaced 3 feet apart. In dividing dahlia clumps, a bud or two from each stem region should remain with the tuber. The tuber alone will produce no shoots. Dahlias need protection from the wind and hot sun.

A survey is now being conducted by the Iowa State College Extension Service which give farmers a better idea of how many pigs the average hog raiser loses and the reasons for these pig deaths.

Corn borers may sometimes be the cause of chaffy corn.

The President and Horseshoe Pitching

President Truman has decided to build a horseshoe pitching court on the White House grounds. This should make America feel better. Much of the trouble that the world is in today is due to the fact few, if any, rulers have been horseshoe pitchers.

There is something about horseshoe pitching that keeps a man cool, eases his nerves and lessens the chances of his doing anything cockeyed. We had a few horseshoe pitchers among our earliest Presidents, and their administrators were the most peaceful in history.

—*—

Perhaps in these troubled times of irascibility, frenzied disputes, hair - trigger decisions, impatience, with the other fellow's viewpoint and the itch to settle everything overnight, horseshoe pitching may save civilization!

—*—

Had Adolf Hitler ever gone in for pitching horseshoes the yen to conquer the world would never have developed. In your wildest dreams can you picture Mussolini fooling around with a horseshoe?

—*—

On with the horseshoe stuff, Harry! You're no genius in statesmanship. You are not the wisest ruler of the day. But nevertheless when the atomic bomb crisis agitates the great men of the earth, when potentates on all sides are shouting at one another and when so many big men have so many hot ideas for causing trouble, it will be good to know that you spend a little time each day out behind the White House pitching horseshoes.

Circus Memories

The circus is back in New York, and thousands of big city kids will be thrilled no end. But we pity the kid who never knew the circus in a small town. Back home in our boyhood it was the event of the year. The first flush of posters on the billboards kindled our imagination. . . . we were sleepless for nights before the great day . . . and we were up at 3:30 a.m. the morning the big show arrived. . . . It was always unloaded in the freight yards down at Long Wharf off Water street, and what a thrill it was to hear the locomotive whistles and then see the circus trains pull in, unload and start on the five-mile trek to the circus grounds, which used to be in Elm City park back of the Hubinger mansion.

After the unloading had progressed an hour or so, we hustled to the grounds to see the tents go up. . . . The rat-tat-tat of the stake-driving crews . . . the rumble of the wagon wheels . . the smell of tambark and hay . . . the aroma of lamb chops and boiled potatoes from the cook-tent . . . oh, boy! We generally managed to get a job leading a pony in a parade and got a free pass to the show.

The "O" has been knocked out of "UNO" which now becomes officially "U.N.," which makes it sound like an Indian grunt. Now if they would only take the "N" out it seems to us it would personalize its message tremendously.

A head of the Mexican baseball league threatens to complain to the American ambassador about an American baseball player who has quit the league. The matter may get before the United Nations security council. Which is a fine idea. It would give the organization terrific press notices, especially if any delegate walked out.

General MacArthur recommends that the Japanese adopt the A.B.C. alphabet. The Japs are satisfied that they were nuts to stage the recent war and they may be ready to admit that the Jap alphabet drove them crazy.

"This is an outrage," he declares
When in a subway jam;
"There ought to be a law!" he screams,

But at the race track he will stand
And take it with a smile.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This newspaper, through special arrangement with the Washington Bureau of Western Newspaper Union at 1616 Eye Street, N. W., Washington, D.C., is able to bring readers this weekly column on problems of the veteran and serviceman and his family. Questions may be addressed to the above Bureau and they will be answered in a subsequent column. No replies can be made direct by mail, but only in the column which will appear in this newspaper regularly.

Farm Advice for Vets

The Veterans' Service bureau is currently receiving scores of letters from veterans, all pertaining to farming—how to get farm loans; how to get farm equipment; farm surplus property; how to build a farm house; to get REA service; to buy farm land, and many other questions pertaining to farming for the veteran.

Answers to these questions can only be general, since conditions vary in many communities, but generally speaking the veteran may find the answers to his questions in his home community, if he but knows where to go. First stop for the farm-bound veteran should be the county agricultural agent. His job is to help all farmers and he has been designated by the USDA to work with returning veterans. His office is usually in the court house. He can answer most of your questions or can refer the veteran to the farm agency working in special fields. All local draft boards have been directed to refer veterans interested in farming to the county agent.

In many agricultural counties, veterans can obtain practical and valuable counsel from working farmers who are serving on the county veterans' advisory committees and this committee also may be approached through the county agent.

Questions and Answers

Q. My son was killed in action April 1, 1943, in the North African area. In November, 1942, he was shipped from New York across, and he did not get his pay from the government for three months and he could not keep up his insurance policy, so it was dropped. I have his letter giving the address as the Pearl Assurance Company, Ltd., of London. Is there any chance of getting insurance on it? Will the body be shipped home if I asked for it? —Mrs. J. P., Hazen, N. D.

A. You would be entitled to your son's back pay, plus six months pay. You may also be entitled to a pension if you are a dependent parent. For your back pay and allowances write to Claims Division, General Accounting Office, Office of Special Settlement Accounts, 27 Pine street, New York 5, N. Y. For a pension if you are entitled to it, make application to your nearest veterans' administration office, probably at Fargo or Bismarck. About your insurance, your son evidently did not take out National Service life insurance, but with a private insurance company in London, and if it lapsed, you could only write to London to obtain its status. Legislation is pending now to authorize shipment of the bodies of American soldiers to the United States under auspices of the army quartermaster department.

Q. My husband was discharged November 21, 1944, and has 70 per cent disability. He has lost all of his papers except his discharge. Can he get new papers and a pension?—Mrs. W. R. F., Mentone, Ala.

A. Yes, the veterans administration office where his disability was rated would have his record and he can obtain copies there. If he has been rated 70 per cent he should be drawing a disability pension. Contact your veterans' administration office.

Q. I am a veteran of World War II. I was inducted December 8, 1942, and was honorably discharged February 19, 1943. I am a farmer and need help on the farm. They told me I am not eligible. Can you tell me? — J. A., Scottsboro, Ala.

A. It appears that you are short the required 90 days service, unless your discharge was due to a disability. Suggest you contact your county agent and see what he can do for you.

Q. I am a mother of seven children. I am unable to work. My husband is a veteran of World War I and since he has deserted the family for another woman, we have no support and he says he won't support us. Is there any chance of getting a pension for me and the children from this veteran? — Mrs. D. V. E., Portageville, Mo.

A. There appears to be none as long as he is alive and suffers no disability. The courts are available to you for support of your children.

Q. Is a former divorced wife of a World War I veteran who has not remarried and to whom alimony had been decreed, eligible for a pension when the divorce was procured by the veteran?—Mrs. S. R., Atlanta, Ga.

A. Yes, providing you are a widow and lived with him for 10 years and was not at fault in the divorce and providing, if you are without children, your income is not more than $1,000 annually. You should apply to the veterans' administration office at Atlanta to determine your eligibility, however.

TIME TO 'PLAY BALL'

Great Ball Season Seen

Returned Vets Add Color to Nat'l Game

By AL JEDLICKA
WNU Features.

"Play ball!" And the crack of the bat again thrills Americans the nation over as the 1946 season gets under way.

While softball, football, basketball and golf have challenged baseball for youth's attentions in recent years, the game still ranks as the No. 1 sports spectacle, an enjoyable outdoor relaxation for the fans. Last year, approximately 15 million persons paid to watch major and minor league ball, and with most of the big stars returning from the war this season attendance should be equally great or greater.

Nineteen hundred and forty-six may be a memorable year for another reason, too, for it marks the introduction of baseball on a big-time professional basis in Mexico. Following an old American custom, President Avila Camacho tossed out the first ball at the Mexican league's first game in which the Vera Cruz Blues walloped the Mexico City Reds 12 to 5 before an overflow crowd of 33,000 in Mexico City.

In the U. S., chief interest again will center on the major league races, though the return of topnotch performers from the services and continued postwar prosperity should herald a banner minor league season.

It'll be like old times again in the American league with the New York Yankee sluggers back in there, denting the fences. But because of an average pitching staff, Joe McCarthy's aggregation will be strongly pressed for pennant honors by the champion Detroit Tigers, Boston Red Sox and Washington Senators.

EASY WAY . . . Jimmy Dykes with Rudy Laski, Joe Smaza and Doyle Lade of the Chicago White Sox.

Yanks Have Sluggers.

Indicative of the dynamite in the Yankee bats, DiMaggio hit .305 in his last season out, Keller .301, Stirnweiss .309, and Dickey .351 Though falling below the .300 mark, the other regulars have that explosive Yankee touch in the pinch.

While the New Yorkers are long on power and short on pitching, the Detroit Tigers have strength in both departments and may well repeat their 1945 league triumph. A .311 slugger in 78 games last year after his discharge from the army, Hank Greenberg will be at first this season, with hard-hitting Pinky Higgins back at third and Barney McCosky, Dick Wakefield and Pat Mullin in a youthful, brilliant outfield.

But the Tigers' real strength lies on the mound, with lanky Hal Newhouser, who won 25 games in 1945 while dropping only 9, heading the staff. In addition, Manager Steve O'Neill has Dizzy Trout, an 18-game winner last year; Virgil Trucks, Stuffy Overmire, Al Benton and Ruff Gentry.

Because of all-around balance, many of the major league scribes like the Boston Red Sox chances in 1946.

Williams Sparks Red Sox.

Back from the wars after three years in naval aviation, spindly Ted Williams, who hit .356 for Joe Cronin's outfit in 1942, promises to put plenty of punch back into the scarlet hose along with Rudy York, obtained from the Tigers in an overwinter trade; Johnny Pesky, who hit .331 before joining the navy in 1943, and Bobby Doerr, who rung up a .325 average prior to his induction in the army in 1944.

In pitchers Tex Hughson and Big Boo Ferris, Manager Cronin appears to have two sure-fire 15 to 20 game winners, while Mickey Harris, Jim Bagby and Jim Wilson are expected to develop into grade A moundsmen.

Nosed out of the American league pennant by a single game in 1945, the Washington Senators will be back knocking at the door again this year if their knuckle-balling pitching staff stands up under the six-month strain, and the boys can stir up enough punch to help out hard-hitting Jeff Heath, Stan Spence, Buddy Lewis and Cecil Travis.

Head of the Senators knuckleballers is 36-year-old Emil ("Dutch") Leonard, vet of 13 long seasons of play who chalked up 17 victories in 1945 against 7 losses and possessed an earned run average of 2.13 per game. The other so-called "flutter-ballers" are Roger Wolff, who turned in 20 wins last year, Marino Pieretti, with 14, and Johnny Niggeling, much stronger than in 1945, following the removal of ulcers.

Others Have a Chance.

While Cleveland, St. Louis, Chicago and Philadelphia have been counted out of the American League pennant race, they may, with lots of luck, crowd into the first division. Because of a strong pitching staff headed by the sensational Bobby Feller, fresh from the navy, Cleveland stands the best chance of breaking into the select four, while 83-year-old Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics appear headed for the cellar despite the presence of Russ Christopher and Dick ("No Hit") Fowler on the pitching staff.

Profiting again from their extensive farm club system, the St. Louis Cardinals are the ruling favorites to take National league honors away from the Chicago Cubs. The Brooklyn Dodgers, New York Giants and Boston Braves also are highly touted, while the Pittsburgh Pirates may well develop into the dark-horses of the race.

Few new major league managers have stepped into the gold-mine Eddie Dyer has in his first year as the St. Louis Cardinals' manager. He succeeds Billy Southworth, who has taken up the reins of the Boston Braves.

In his regular outfield, the lucky Mr. Dyer intends to start Stan Musial, who hit .347 before entering the navy in 1944; Terry Moore, the fielding genius who hit .288 prior to his induction into service in 1942, and Enos Slaughter, who batted .318 before joining the air force the same year.

Star performers in the infield include the great Marty Marion, wide-ranging shortstop, and Whitey Kurowski, slugging third baseman, who hit .323 and batted in 102 runs last year.

Mighty Mound Staff.

Among Dyer's ranking pitchers are Red Barrett, who won 23 games his last time out; Johnny Beazley, 21; Max Lanier, 17, and Harry Brecheen, 15.

While Charley Grimm has none of this kind of talent in Chicago, he does have a hustling ball club to work behind a winning mound staff headed by big Hank Borowy, who helped pitch the Cubs into a pennant after being secured from the Yankees last year; Claude Passeau, who won 17 games in 1945 despite an ailing right arm; Hank Wyse, who turned in 22 victories in spite of a sore back, and Hi Bithorn, who chalked up 18 wins in 1943 before entering the navy.

CARDINALS . . . Manager Eddie Dyer (center) talks it over with Johnny Beazley and Enos Slaughter.

The National League's champion batsman in 1945 with a .355 mark, Phil Cavarretta, will be back at first to pace the Cubs' attack, with help forthcoming from the veteran Stanley Hack at third, who hit .323 in his 12th season as a Bruin last year; little "Peanuts" Lowrey, Andy Pafko and — Grimm hopes — Big Bill Nicholson, who flopped to .243 last year.

Led by the irrepressible Leo ("The Lip") Durocher, who won fame as one of the toughest of the "Gas House Gang" at St. Louis in the thirties, the Brooklyn Dodgers are figured to be right up in the thick of the National league race.

"The Lip" enters the pennant run with a fair country outfield in Pete Reiser, who hit .310 before joining the army in 1942; Goody Rosen, who batted .325 last year; the veteran Dixie Walker, and rookie Gene Hermanski. In the infield, Billy Herman and Pee-wee Reese make a winning combination around second. While none too strong, the pitching staff is built around fire-balling Kirby Higbe, Hugh Casey, Ed Head and Vic Lombardi.

Giants Still Powerful.

The New York Giants, while not the hated and feared aggregation of the John McGraw or Bill Terry days, nonetheless is expected to cut a figure in this year's race. No defensive geniuses, the Giants do possess power, with Manager Mel Ott, who hit .308 last year, in right; Johnny Mize, .305, at first; Mickey Witek, .314, at third, and Walker Cooper, .317, behind the plate.

Ability of brainy Billy Southworth to spur the Boston Braves to give all they have largely accounts for the high esteem in which the team has been held this year.

SMILING . . . New York Giants Bob Blattner, second base, and Bill Rigney, shortstop, have the old spirit.

The Braves do have the nucleus for a winner with big Mort Cooper, who won 65 games for Southworth in three years for the Cards, on the hill, and slugging Tommy Holmes, Max West and Johnny Hopp in the outfield.

Pittsburgh's Pirates, rated none too highly in the early doping, could easily develop into the dark-horse of the 1946 season. In shortstop Bill Cox and outfielder Ralph Kiner, Manager Frisch has come up with two prize prospects to go along with established performers like Bob Elliott in the outfield and Elbie Fletcher and Babe Dahlgren in the infield. With Lefties Ostermueller, Wilkie and Roe and right-handers Sewell, Gables, Heintzelman and Klinger, the Pirates should get good pitching.

Quoted at 30 to 1 longshots in early betting to win the National league gonfalon, the Cincinnati Reds and Philadelphia Phillies do not figure in the running.

ARMY DISCHARGEES

Four army dischargees in a fanning bee with the Pittsburgh Pirates' doctor. They are, left to right, Ken Heintzelman, Charles A. Jorgenson (the doc), Russ Bauers, Bill Clemensen and Cadis Swigart. Every big league team has its share of ex-servicemen in the starting lineups. Boston has Tex Hughson, Johnny Pesky and Dom DiMaggio back, for instance. The Washington Senators number Buddy Lewis, Cecil Travis, and Al Evans among their vets.

The Guths live on the first farm north of Klemme on the place formerly occupied by the John Kaduce, Sr. family, who lived there for seventeen years.

Garden Talks

May is the time to start planting the warm-loving vegetables. In deciding when to plant, use common sense. If it should turn cold and wet, wait until the soil becomes warm before planting. Beans and corn are the main vegetables for first plantings the first half of May. The tomato is the main crop planted in May.

Many gardeners have had their first experience in growing peanuts in their own garden during the war. The plant is warm-loving and best adapted to sandy soils. Better stands of seedings are usually had if the seeds are planted without shells. Don't shell them until just before planting. Treat the seed with a good disinfectant dust such as Arasan, Spergon or two percent Ceresan to increase the stands and yields.

Ration limited garden space for the most productive kinds of vegetables for the small garden. One is likely to get about five times as many snap-beans from the pole type as the brush type Kentucky Wonder and other pole varieties may be planted along a fence upon which they can climb. Or they may be planted in the garden on 7 or 8 foot poles are set in tepee fashion. For those who must have squash in the smaller size gardens, use the bush rather than the vine type.

Stakes should be secured soon and be ready to give garden plants support. If tomato plants are set out about May 15, the stakes should be ready to place by the plants at the same time. If tomatoes are staked they can be as close as 2 feet apart.

Is D-X Motor Oil
A BETTER OIL?
Than the old Diamond 760 Motor Oil? Definitely yes!
It retains the outstanding performance features of Diamond 760 but is a greatly improved oil of a higher quality. It has a higher Viscosity Index, a greater chemical stability, and resistance to decomposition or breakdown. In addition, it contains bearing corrosion inhibitor, an oxidation inhibitor and a mild detergent— recently developed chemical compounds which give D-X additional performance.

Peas are likely to yield better if they are given some support. This is true even with the dwarf peas. Brush or small-branched limbs may be thrust into the ground between the 6-inch double rows of peas. As the plants develop, they will cling to the brush for support, thus keeping foliage, blossoms and pods off the ground. Length of brush used depends on whether the variety is tall or dwarf. Wire fencing, nailed to stakes between the rows of peas, can be used over and over.

The Dept. of Agriculture reported today that ten per cent of the Iowa corn had now been planted.

PROCLAMATION

The world faces a critical food crisis. Millions of people are starving in Europe; millions more are desperately hungry in India. In China, thousands of people die by the roadsides every day.

The United States should assume some responsibility for saving these people. Our boys fought valiantly to win the war. It is for us as citizens to do every thing in our power to maintain the peace. We have the food which can save the lives of millions of our fellow men.

Just as our sons and daughters accepted the call to war, so must Iowans now accept this great humanitarian responsibility. The world looks to it's leading agricultural state for help.

I, therefore, ask the citizens of this great commonwealth to cooperate to the limit of their ability in the Food-for-Famine program. I fully realize the fine work that has been done and is being done, but efforts must be continued.

I, therefore, designate Sunday, the 19th day of May as

as a day of solemn prayer and thoughtful retrospection, with the hope that needed food may be diverted to hungry peoples. I further urge that every minister devote a portion of his church services to this serious problem and that every citizen attend church on that day.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Iowa to be duly affixed.

Done at the Iowa State Capitol in the city of Des Moines, this second day of May in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and forty-six.

"The world faces a critical food crisis." continued Governor Blue. Millions of people are starving in Europe, millions more are desperately hungry in India. In China, thousands of people die by the roadside every day."

The United States must assume the responsibility for saving these people, stated the governor. "Our boys fought valiantly to win the war and it is up to us as citizens to do everything in our power to win the peace," said Blue. "We have the food which can save the lives of millions of our fellow men."

In his proclamation the governor further suggests that "just as our sons and daughters accepted the call to war, so must Iowans now accept this great humanitarian responsibility. The world looks to its leading agriculture state for help."

FROST NIPS EARLY CORN IN HANCOCK

Weather conditions in Hancock county the past week were favorable for the planting of corn and soybeans but unfavorable for growth.

Some early fields of corn and soybeans were up prior to the freeze and just how much these were damaged has not been determined. Warmer weather will be needed to determine whether the plants will revive.

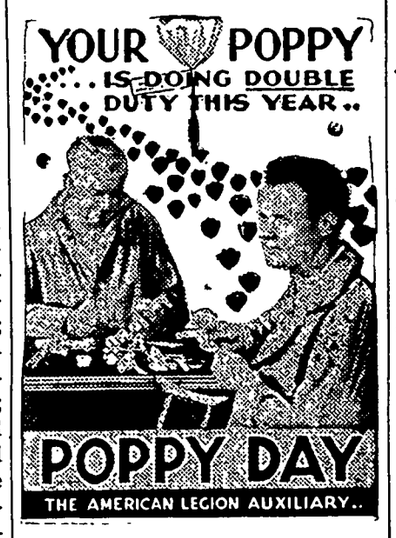
Fox Bounty Boom

Reports from auditors in almost every section of the state indicate that there is a tremendous increase in the number of fox cubs on which bounty is being claimed this spring. Cub hunting has been in progress since the middle of March and will continue until about June 1st. Payment of bounty on foxes is optional, however, in most counties, where bounty is paid, the hunters are allowed $2.00 for an adult and $1.00 each for cubs.

In the opinion of game technicians the fox population is approaching a peak that within a season will decline.



ANNUAL POPPY SALE SATURDAY, MAY 25

How the wild poppy of France and Belgium became the memorial flower of America's dead of both world wars was decribed by. Klemme Uuit of the American Legion Auxiliary, as the Unit went forward with preparations for observance of Poppy Day here May 25.

"Amid the desolation of the battlefront in the first world war, the poppies were the one touch of nature's beauty that survived. The little red flowers grew along the trenches and shell holes, and over the raw earth of the battle graves. In the minds of the men fighting there, the poppies became associated with their dead comrades."

"Expression was given to this sentiment by Colonel John McCrea, Canadian medical officer, in his immortal poem, with its lines:

"In Flander's Field the poppies blow,
Between the crosses,

"Replicas of Flander's Fields poppy were first worn in America in honor of the war dead in 1918, and the wearing of these flowers on the Saturday before Memorial Day soon became a nation-wide custom.

"When the second world war began claiming Amercian lives, the popppy, quite naturally, became the symbol of these added sacrifices for the nation. The largest part of World War 2 battle deaths occurred in northern Europe where the poppy grows, but no matter where Americans died, the poppy pays tribute to them.

Millions of Americans will wear the veteran-made poppies this year in silent tribute to to those who lie beneath the crosses in Flanders fields and in the American war cemeteries throughout the world."

America Gets a Lift In Morale

The OPA has taken price controls off hammocks, fly swatters, decorative sofa pillows, pocket knives and thermometers among other things. This means a terrific boost to American morale.

The news that hammocks and fly swatters are now within the reach of all is alone enough to lift a heavy feeling from the hearts of the people. These two articles open the way to comfort and peace of mind unknown since Pearl Harbor.

Here is a nation, nervous, morose and apprehensive, under the harassments and confusions of reconversion with all its chaos and befuddlements . . . and suddenly it finds it can get hammocks and fly swatters! The lift is tremendous.

And when you throw in a decorative sofa pillow and a whittling knife, boy, you are guilding the lily.

This release of hammocks, fly swatters, etc., may become the smartest move the Truman administration has made so far. It may mean that the tide against the Democrats has not only been checked but turned the other way.

Millions of Americans are forever emphasizing the part axes, picks, shovels, buffalo guns, surveyors' implements, pack mules and covered wagons have played in building the nation. But the part played by hammocks, fly swatters and whittling knives has been overlooked.

Nearly all epic performances are the result of someone's dream. And the great dreamers have been hammock and fly swatter boys.

OPA freed the hammocks only a few days ago, and already the kicking and squawking that has made us unhappy ever since the end of the war has declined 54 per cent.

It's the most humanizing act of the Truman administration. The world looks lovelier.

If Fighting Men Did It The U. N. Way

General — Captain, the objective is a town just beyond the mountain. You must cross three rivers before you reach the mountain. Prepare your men for an immediate offensive.

Captain—I object to this proposal at this time and ask a postponement for two weeks.

General—Your suggestion is improper at this time. Execute the attack at once!

Captain—Is that your final decree in this matter?

General—Positively.

Captain—Then I walk out!

(He walks).

G. I.—May I have the floor?

General—To what purpose does the gentleman rise?

G. I.—I want to ask a vote on the validity of this attack.

General—The gentleman is out of order.

G. I.—I take an exception to this ruling, and I reserve the right to see my lawyer.

Another G. I.—I move that the battle be deferred until July 6.

Sergeant (rather confused) — But suppose the enemy is out of the position by that time?

G. I.—We can wait!

THE NATIONAL GAME

Ima Dodo assumes that in Mexico the cry at the opening of a baseball game is "Play bull!"

President Truman has received free passes to ball games in both big leagues. Now it becomes more certain than ever that the Big Three meetings will have to wait until next winter.

HERE AND THERE

You'll never guess who are John Kieran's favorite movie stars. . . . Kate Hepburn and the cartoon-strip celery-chewing rabbit! . . . Beautiful reading: The Autobiography of William Allen White, as witness this concerning a childhood sweetheart. . . . "I can see Agnes Reilly yet in all her loveliness and hear her voice. I remember going bashfully to the spring-wagon when she climbed in with her family to go home. And as the horses jogged away and the spring-wagon faded into the night I stood there watching her out of sight. Nearly every Sunday I hired a horse and buggy and went to see her; life was as lovely as the picture on a cigar box."

Ima Dodo attributes her popularity to the fact she has never crossed a nylon line.

It is now possible to print a facsimile newspaper on a radio set. This heralds the era when a subscriber may squawk, "I didn't like last night's edition; the features seemed to be suffering from bulb trouble."

And the announcement, "Owing to the broadcast of a special feature at this time your paper will be cancelled until tomorrow."

Household Hints

If your floor squeaks, sprinkle talcum powder between the boards. If this doesn't work, try putting a small wedge between them.

Frequently dust behind the pictures on the wall to prevent dust accumulating and forming a black outline.

Paste a little strip of sandpaper on the lower edge of each picture frame in your home. This will grip the wallpaper and keep the picture hanging straight.

A handy garden apron may be made from a heavy burlap-like material gathered into a two-inch wide tape belt, and having a square of leather stitched low on the apron for a kneeling pad.

A little lemon juice sprinkled over chops, before they are broiled, gives them a distinctive flavor.

...E'S LITTLE PEOPLE 1946

...s Kaput,' Germans Complain As They View Destroyed Cities

By PAULINE FREDERICK
WNU Foreign Correspondent.

...AMBURG (ENGLISH ZONE), GERMANY.—It was ...ous that Frau Hohlman was not satisfied with her lot. ...said it was cold—and it was, with little heat from the ...stove. But I could have led her to shacks and under...nd hovels where there was even less heat and no sub...tial walls to keep out the weather such as surrounded her.

...also said there was not ...h food—black bread, marma...nd coffee for breakfast, soup ...otatoes for lunch, and so on. ...ecured on the table a few ...of cracked grain to show me ...they were eating; then care...picked up every piece of it and ...back in the box as though it ...a precious stone.

...Frau Hohlman was more for...e than a lot of her country ...n. She had chickens in her ...yard. And when I accidentally ...peep into her pantry, I saw ...ong loaves of bread, two and ...f rolls of what was probably ...arine, and a can that un...edly contained food. Not all ...an larders are like that.

...u Hohlman is fortunate enough ...e in a prefabricated house. She ...wearing a blue-checked apron ...blue sweater. She did not know ...coming, but she admitted me, ...ugh a little suspiciously, to the ...ination kitchen-living room and ...oom where there was a bed in ...corner with the red feather pil...turned back to air.

Fuel and Food Scarce.

...e furniture consisted of a cup...d, a table, chairs, a radio and a ...l wood stove with some sticks ...g in the oven. A large double ...ow framed in muslin curtains ...ed to the garden. The other ...of the cottage had two beds ...and a dresser. It, too, had a ...window. The place was light ...airy, although small.

...visited another prefabricated ...e where a cheerful, emaciated ...g man in his 20's lived with ...wife and year-old baby. I saw ...pantry, too, and I saw nothing ...a small piece of bread and a ...-eaten dish of macaroni. But the ...er said "everything was fine," ...when I gave him two cigarettes he was profuse in his thanks. He pointed with pride to the little pile of brush and the stump in the yard which furnished fuel. The pretty, runny-nosed baby smiled, too.)

"Alles kaput," said Frau Hohlman, using the current German expression in describing what had happened to their old home when a bomb hit it.

But here she lives today with her husband who works in a margarine factory, and with her married daughter whose husband is still missing in Russia. With electricity, the house costs them 24 marks a month. The husband earns about 40 marks a week, and more if he works at night. The Hohlman yard was furrowed for spring gardening.

As I talked with Frau Hohlman, the food ration was being met, although there was a great shortage in potatoes and the only vegetables available were a certain amount of turnips and cabbage. But what I could not tell them was the dire picture of the food situation in the British zone unless a miracle happens. It was revealed to me at British military government headquarters at Minden by F. Hollins, director of food and agriculture.

Famine in British Zone.

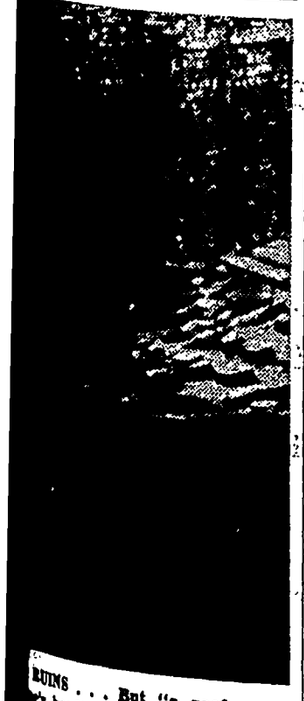
Mr. Hollins told me that at the rate the bread grain stocks were going down and not being replenished, pockets of starvation could soon be expected in the British zone. The food permitted the Germans by the British is designed to provide 1,545 calories per day for the average person, with 2,250 for heavy workers, 2,809 for very heavy workers and 2,589 for pregnant and nursing mothers. Bread and the cereal products make up 60 per cent of the caloric diet. The city of Hamburg alone uses between 350 and 400 tons of grain a day.

Bread is especially vital here because of the heavy workers in the Ruhr and the Rhineland. In order to keep from cutting the ration before the spring months when vegetables would make it more bearable, the British zone needs at least 200,000 tons of wheat a month until the end of June. Only half that amount arrived in February and at a late date, none had been programmed at all for March.

When the British took over this zone they found 21 million people, or a million and a half more than lived here in 1939. In bombed-out areas, homes had to be provided as well as food. Of the 5½ million dwelling units available in 1939, about half of them have been destroyed by bombing. Anything that can be used to provide a roof is sought by the Germans, but their biggest demand is for food.

"We are living on the edge of a precipice," Mr. Hollins told me, "and it would take very little to topple the thing over and make the situation very serious indeed."

Once more I am hearing the cry of "bread" as I have heard it in many countries in the last year. And I have been wondering what the answer will be.



...RUINS . . . But "a roof over ...r's head" is most desired, for ...ses can be built of stones.

'No One Wants to Shoot Children'

As I had crossed the border from Denmark, one sight of all others made me realize I was back in Germany. It was the stumps of freshly-cut trees.

As I waited in front of the station for transportation, a scabby-faced boy in his teens begged me for cigarettes, and a child asked for chewing gum. On the way to the hotel, I saw an old man rummaging through a trash can.

South Carolina

The Palmetto State

By EDWARD EMERINE
WNU Features.

"WHY not enjoy living? We do!"

Backed by over 400 years of history, tradition and romance, soft-spoken South Carolina is still glamorous and appealing. Consider for a moment that 90 per cent of the South Carolinians in the armed forces, when polled, indicated their intention of returning to their native state when they got out of uniform! Though they had seen the world, they found nothing to lure them away from the Low country, the Up country, and the Piedmont in between.

South Carolina has had a glorious past. But also it has a future! It endured terrible years of Reconstruction following the War Between the States, and it was not until the turn of the century that order came out of chaos. Then South Carolina was aware of itself again, ready to cope with its problems in the light of progress.

Each decade has seen improvement, and a further step toward the fulfillment of its destiny. South Carolina is vibrant with new life, new energies, and a will to progress. Wealth has been introduced by textile and other industries, including plastics and chemicals. Soil reclamation, reforestation, flood control, hydro-electric development — those are the projects of today. Agriculture has been spurred to new heights by scientific aids. Fields of cotton, corn, tobacco and peanuts still remain; but new crops have been added and more will come. And new industries too, for South Carolina is rich in natural resources, many of them as yet undeveloped.

"Open for business," South Carolina advertises, and points to excellent highways, rail and water transportation, and main routes of airplane travel. Favored by a mild all-year climate, it beckons to those who want a home, pleasure, jobs, business, manufacturing, farming and a good life.

More than 80 years before Virginia was founded and over 90 years before the Puritans reached Massachusetts, a white settlement was founded on what is now Winyah bay in the Low country. It was the ill-fated Spanish settlement of San Miguel de Gualdape.

Other Spaniards came, De Soto and Juan Pardo, to explore the interior about the Savannah river. Competing with the Spaniards were the French, who in 1562 briefly settled a body of Huguenots at Port Royal. None of these ventures endured, however, and it was left to the English to establish permanent settlements.

Charles I in 1629 granted to Sir Robert Heath "all America from sea to sea between the 36th and 31st parallels of latitude under the name of Carolina." Even then the country remained unexplored until 1663 when Charles II chartered the same territory to eight of his loyal friends. They became lord proprietors of the province of Carolina. In March, 1670, the first settlement, consisting of 148 persons, was made at Albemarle Point and named Charles Town, the Charleston of today.

Cavaliers and Puritans came from England to swell the population. The fame of Carolina sunshine spread, and the story of its fertile soil was repeated in many lands. From across the sea and from other American colonies they came, until there were Cavaliers, Puritans, French Huguenots, Irish, Dutch and Germans. Many Quakers arrived early, and one of them, John Archlade, served as governor of the province. Later more than a thousand suffering Acadians found a refuge and a home. Added to all these were the Negroes, bringing an unsuspected gift of rhythm, and furnishing the sinews for the struggle to build a new land.

Like all colonists they brought with them old hatreds and differences of class and creed. Some came for riches, some for adventure, others sought relief from religious persecution. They quarreled often among themselves, but stood together against any common enemy. They repulsed the attacking Indians and they fought off pirates from the coast. In 1718 at Charleston, 49 pirates swung from the gallows in one month, with 22 of them dangling there one day.

They fought for the right of local self-government. They overthrew the proprietary government and became a royal province under the king's charter. They finally revolted against the king himself, and became one of the 13 original American colonies. They reasserted themselves again in 1860, and there followed the Civil war.

Through all the years, in massacre and war, through storm and fire, despite earthquake and pestilence, the people of South Carolina struggled on. They explored the wilderness and located new towns and more plantations. They built roads through forests and swamps, and threw bridges across rivers and streams. They built houses of "tabby"—a composition of crushed oyster shell—and of thick hardwood logs. They spread out from the Low country to the Up country. They built for beauty and utility and discovered the dignity of life.

"Charleston is the place where the Ashley and Cooper rivers meet to form the Atlantic ocean," is the traditional geography lesson of a Charleston child — a lesson as significant as it is descriptive. Men and women of South Carolina believe in themselves, in their state, and in their destiny. They have produced leisure, culture and a high responsibility of citizenship. They have drawn character from the land itself, and courage and integrity from their labors. More than 250 years of war-torn history have molded and tempered and strengthened a people until they know their metal.

Gloriously patriotic in World Wars I and II, South Carolina has furnished, fed and trained men for every battlefield in the world. Her heroes have followed Old Glory to the farthest ends of the earth, gathering Purple Hearts and battle stars—and filling lonely graves.

South Carolina's motto is Dum Spiro, Spero (While I Breathe I Hope); also, Animus Opibusque Parati (Prepared in Spirit and Wealth, or Ready with Minds and Resources), and at no time in her history have these phrases been more fitting than they are now.

From the mountains to the sea, South Carolina has 31,055 square miles of inviting land!

If you're planning to use one of the new magic weed killers containing 2,4-D remember to clean the sprayer thoroughly before using it to spray garden vegetables or ornamentals. Very small quantities of 2,4-D left in the sprayer can injure garden plants, so it doesn't pay to be careless with the chemical. Its best of course, to have a sprayer in which only 2,4-D is used. Otherwise, it's necessary to cleanse the sprayer thoroughly with hot water and suds and rinse several times after 2,4-D has been used.

When harvesting rhubarb, pull don't cut the stalks from the plant. Grasp the stalk near the base and pull to one side in the direction the stalk leans. Although rhubarb stalks are delicious, the leaves are poisonous. They are high in oxalic acid and should not be used for greens. Keep flower stalks cut from rhubarb plants too, and throw them on the compost heap along with the rhubarb leaves.

Care must be used in harvesting asparagus to avoid injury to the crown and the young spears. Cut spears 1 inch below soil level. Newly set asparagus plants should not be cut this year. Next year, harvest only 2 weeks, the third year until June 1, and after that harvest up to June 15. Use of salt is not necessary in growing asparagus.

Cultivate about 1 inch deep between rows of early planted vegetables. To do this quickly, perhaps the best attachment for the wheel hoe is one having a double-edged, knife-like blade. In some soils the ordinary rake can be used to cultivate once a week to prevent weeds from gaining headway.

Keep a sharp lookout in the garden for bugs. Check every day if possible. The first Colorado potato beetles should be hand-picked and destroyed before they have a chance to lay eggs. Potatoes must be dusted once a week or sprayed every 10 days. The dust used may be 3 percent DDT, or a dust mixture composed of 1 part calcium arsenate and 10 parts dusting sulfur. If spraying is preferred, use 1 tablespoon of calcium or lead arsenate and 4 talbespoons of commercial dry bordeaux mixture per gallon of water.

Tests made by U.S.D. workers at Menard, Texas, laboratores indicate the possibility of developing a dip containing DDT for the control of the sheep tick in a single dipping.

The commerce department estimates British purchases in the United States will approximate $1,000,000 in 1946.

House Cats Destructive To Wildlife

The ordinary house cat has long been recognized by game technicians as most destructive to wildlife. Some even go so far as to state that cats destroy more game than all other predators combined. The worst of the cats, of course, is the one that actually goes wild. These cats call home a nest under an abandoned building or in a ground hog den. There are thousands of such cats in Iowa. For every cat that takes up permanent habitation in the fields, however, there are hundreds of occasional hunters. These are the milk-lapping tabbies who part-time quietly lie in front of the fire-place. They are truely the Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hydes of the animal world. Even the most docile, home-loving tabby with a warm bird in its mouth reverts to savagery. Try to remove a bird from a cat's mouth, and you'll be greeted with an angry flashing of eyes and a deep-chested growl that you never dreamed would some from your ordinarily gentle-mannered pussy cat. Cats selected for their mouse-catching ability are useful if kept in there proper place, but they should never be allowed to run in the wild, especially in May and June, when both song and game bird young are almost helpless.

FAMINE NEWS

How do Hancock county garbage cans compare with Polk county's cans?

"We throw away the richest garbage in the world" is backed up by this story of a Polk County farmer. This farmer picks up garbage at a number of Des Moines restaurants. Last year he fed 800 hogs on this garbage. This year there's so much food waste going into the garbage cans that he has been forced to put on an extra truck and expects to feed 1200 hogs.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Crack Down on G. I.s in Europe; UNRRA Aid Falls Short of Needs; U. S. Sets Foreign Loan Terms

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of (Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Pointing up Herbert Hoover's statement that 30 million European children are in need of extra food, these Italian youngsters beg photographer for bread. Boy at left tries to sell peanuts to obtain money for purchasing cereals.

ARMY:
Tighten Discipline

With the low state of discipline leading to loss of respect for American authority by the enemy and injury to our reputation among the Allies, Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, U. S. commander in Europe, ordered all unit commanders to jack up on personnel.

Citing the rapid demobilization and dissolution of tried battle groups, McNarney declared that makeshift units possess none of the pride of the veteran outfits and officers do not have the same traditional attachment to their men as they would have for those regularly under them.

McNarney listed six indications of a deterioration of army discipline in Europe, including participation in black markets and drunkenness; high absence without leave; the imposing automobile accident rate; excessive venereal disease infection; lack of smartness in appearance and conscientious observance of military courtesy, and complaining attitudes toward top authority.

OVERSEAS RELIEF:
UNRRA Aid

Set up to provide relief for war-stricken areas, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration furnished 4 million tons of supplies costing almost 700 million dollars up to December 31, 1945, but help extended constitutes only a drop in the bucket compared to over-all requirements.

Famine Committee Poster

President Truman's release of a report of UNRRA's activities came as the combined U. S., British and Canadian food board allotted the international agency 460,000 tons of cereals from its grain pool. While UNRRA Director LaGuardia had asked for 700,000 tons, Allied food experts were unable to grant his requests in view of the needs of other people not fed by his organization.

With the U. S. and Britain providing the bulk of the funds, UNRRA's distributions to December 31, 1945, included:

Country	Tons	Value, dollars
Greece	1,739,667	206,107,000
Yugoslavia	976,223	190,057,000
Czechoslovakia	408,427	87,575,000
Poland	348,219	113,212,000
China	197,112	23,237,000
Italy	134,017	24,129,000
Albania	67,175	13,000,000
Ukrainian S.S.R.	44,136	10,434,000
Byelorussian S.S.R.	22,226	4,687,000
Dodecanese Islands	1,588	123,000
Others	20,467	8,992,000
Totals	3,959,257	681,553,000

Concern over the feeding of the world's hunger hit areas was heightened by a U. S. weather bureau report that rain was sorely needed in some sections of the great plains wheat growing states if the department of agriculture's forecasts of another bumper crop were to materialize.

U. S. CREDIT:
Name Conditions

While the U. S. was determined to demand free trade in eastern Europe as a condition for granting Russia a one-billion dollar loan, a 90 million dollar advance was made to Soviet-dominated Poland on the stipulation that free and unhampered elections would be held to name a representative democratic government for the country.

Of the 90 million dollar loan to Poland, 40 million will be used for the purchase of American coal cars and locomotives to facilitate the movement of fuel to western Europe and the Balkans, the U. S. state department disclosed. The remainder of the credit will be applied against Poland's acquisition of surplus property in Europe.

Besides requiring the conduct of free elections, the U. S. obtained Poland's agreement not to discriminate against American nationals and trade and to properly compensate U. S. citizens and corporations whose property has been taken over or nationalized.

U. S. demands on Russia for free trade in eastern Europe in exchange for a one billion dollar loan followed the Soviets' quick postwar maneuvering to bring the region under their economic domination.

Under a five-year pact with Hungary, joint Russo-Hungarian navigation, oil, aviation, bauxite and aluminum companies were set up, while a similar deal with Romania resulted in formation of Russo-Romanian bank, oil, navigation and aviation enterprises. In some instances, the Soviets' equities consist of concessions or Axis property claimed as reparations.

Short term barter agreements also were negotiated with Poland, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary, involving substantial amounts of raw and finished material.

Ripping into the Soviets' eastern European deals, the U. S. has protested on the grounds that no permanent peace treaties have yet been drawn as a basis of negotiations; the major allies pledged themselves to work together for rebuilding ex-enemy countries, and composition of joint companies can be implemented to exclude other nations from participating in economic enterprises.

ITALY:
Fascist Underground

Theft of the remains of Benito Mussolini from a potter's field near Milan pointed up the undercover activities of fascist forces in Italy. Bitter foes of the communist-socialist bloc, Il Duce's followers have been working quietly in the immediate postwar period, seeking to capitalize on complaints of cumbersome democratic processes and foster sentiment for renewed authoritarian rule.

When Mussolini's body was dug up from an unmarked grave and carried off, with a boot with part of a rotted leg left to lie behind, a note extolling Il Duce and signed "Democratic Fascist party" was placed near the burial plot. In lyrical style the note read: "The time will come in which Benito Mussolini in his coffin, kissed by our sun, will parade through the streets of Italy and all the roses of the world and all the tears of our women will not be enough to give extreme greetings of the country to this great son."

According to some estimates, no less than 200,000 Italians are said to be members of the secret S.A.M. (Squadre d'Azione Mussolini) organization, which has been most active in the northern section of the country. Consisting of personnel of former fascist military units, the S.A.M. work in units of from 25 to 50 persons, with instructions to check political activity and infiltrate into parties and foment discord.

EX-CONVICTS:

Thirty-nine states are now participating in a nation-wide system designed to aid rehabilitation of the paroled convict who wants to "start life over" in a new environment, the council of state governments reports.

The compact was designed not only to aid rehabilitation of those with criminal records but also to stop "commuting criminals" from taking advantage of the devices affording protection by state lines.

Gas Revenues Increase

Ten states collected more than 25 million dollars each from gasoline tax revenues in 1945 when total receipts from such levies reached 849.6 million dollars — an increase of 13 per cent over 1944 collections which totaled 747.4 million dollars. Of the 10 states that lead in collections, Florida with its levy of six cents a gallon had the highest tax rate.

RYE:
Futures Soar

With May rye hovering at the $2.63 a bushel mark and daily future transactions running far above prewar levels, the Chicago Board of Trade was scheduled to undertake its second investigation of dealings in the commodity to ascertain if any operator or group possessed a corner.

Having failed to uncover a "corner" after a probe several months ago, the board renewed its investigation by ordering all members to report accounts with open positions.

Because May rye carries no ceiling, observers said that the high prices the grain commands reflect supply and demand. Against the $2.63 a bushel figure in the open market, the new crop was selling around the $1.48 a bushel ceiling.

RAIL WRECK:
Big Toll

In the worst train wreck since 1944, when two sections of the Southern Pacific collided near Great Salt Lake, Utah, and 48 persons were killed, the Burlington's Exposition Flyer plowed into the rear of the stalled Advance Flyer in Naperville, Ill., to take a toll of approximately 48 dead.

Running on the same track three minutes apart, the two crack trains crashed when the Advance Flyer pulled up to a stop for its crew to investigate a flash of flame from beneath one of the coaches. Though an automatic caution signal went on 7,784 feet to the east and a danger signal beamed 1,100 feet from the stalled train, the engineer of the Exposition Flyer was unable to brake his charging Diesel in time to avoid the crash.

Though Engineer W. W. Blaine, 68, of Galesburg, Ill., himself suffered only a face cut, many passengers were killed when his big locomotive ripped into the last steel coach on the Advance Flyer and the impact buckled the diner ahead of it and overturned two other cars. In all, six coaches were upset or derailed and lay strewn over the twisted track like toys. In addition to the 48 killed, over 100 were injured.

DIPLOMACY:
Four-Power Meet

Settlement of the ticklish Yugoslav claims to Italian Trieste loomed as the foreign ministers of the U. S., Britain, Russia and France met in Paris in an attempt to iron out complex political and economic questions holding up the formulation of peace treaties for former Axis satellites.

As Byrnes, Bevin, Molotov and Bidault met to speed up the conclusion of terms, their deputy foreign ministers who had foundered over a majority of the issues happily advanced a solution to the Trieste problem: Agreeing to settle territorial claims on the basis of residential nationalities, the deputies recommended Italy's retention of Italian-populated Trieste and surrender to Yugoslavia of Yugoslavian-settled land nearby the vital port.

Disposition of Trieste was only one of the knotty problems facing the Big Four in drawing terms for Italy. One of the principal bones of contention centered in Russia's demands for trusteeships over Italy's North African colonies situated along Britain's Mediterranean lifeline to the Far East. With Britain resisting the Reds' claims out of an unwillingness to establish the Soviets in a strategic position along the imperial lifeline, the U. S. advanced a compromise under which the colonies would be placed under a United Nations' trusteeship.

CIGARETTES:
Hike Prices

In granting increases in the price of cigarettes, OPA declared that rising manufacturing costs necessitated the boosts to assure producers of earnings equal to prewar levels.

While manufacturers were allowed a 25 cent raise per 1,000 cigarettes, retailers were permitted to hike the prices a half cent a pack on multiple sales of two, four, six, etc., packs and five cents on a carton of 10 packs. Where sale of cigarettes through vending machines is permissible, an increase of one cent a pack was granted.

Allowed primarily on sales of multiple packs offered at cut-rates, the price increases were not extended to single packs.

BANKING:

For the first calendar year in history, no American bank failed during 1945.

Records of the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation for the past year reveal that no bank depositor in the United States experienced a loss from a bank failure. The number of bank failures is always small during a period when bank assets are increasing rapidly and the national income is high, according to the FDIC, but 1945's record was unique.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

DREW PEARSON

CABINET LADIES AND MENUS

WASHINGTON. — Ladies of the cabinet are really practicing what their husbands preach regarding the saving of food for Europe. Ever since President Truman urged that the American people eat the equivalent of a European ration two days a week, cabinet wives have been studying menus.

Mrs. Clinton Anderson, whose secretary of agriculture husband is one of the hardest-working of the food conservers, has given permission to publish one of her menus. It provides 1,540 calories — the equivalent of a European ration — as compared with the normal American diet of 3,600 calories.

Here it is, with the number of calories listed after each item of food:

Breakfast—glass of orange juice (75); bowl of cereal (100); milk for cereal (85); half-a-pint of milk or cocoa (170)—total, 430.

Lunch—half-a-cup of thick soup or chowder (150); vegetable salad without oil in dressing (75); muffin (75); baked custard (100); half-a-pint of milk (170)—total, 570.

Dinner — poultry, fish or meat (150); potato (large serving) (150); green vegetable (peas, beans, greens or broccoli) (40); raw vegetable strips (carrots, celery, tomato, cabbage) (50); half-cup of fruit (150) or milk for children—total 540.

TRUMAN'S GIRL FRIEND

The leading lady of the poppy presentation ceremonies to President Truman fell hard for the chief executive.

Three-year-old Betty Lou Hall of Eaton Rapids, Mich., one of five orphaned children left by a heroic infantryman killed after the Normandy invasion, was selected to put the poppy in Truman's lapel in behalf of war orphans of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Her job finished, the little girl was asked by photographers if she didn't want to kiss the President. She complied not with one kiss, but a shower of them. In fact, the young lady seemed inclined to continue this part of the proceedings indefinitely until reminded that her embraces were sufficient for picture purposes.

ARMY MORALS OVERSEAS

One reason for strong sentiment in the senate against drafting 18-year-olds is that many senators have been abroad since V-E Day and have seen first-hand the wanton immorality to which young soldiers are exposed.

Returned senators are especially critical of U. S. army officers for setting a bad example to young G.I.s.

"When they see their superior officers living in German castles with fraulcins," reported Sen. Harley Kilgore of West Virginia, "enlisted men get a very bad impression. It's no place for youngsters. After they get to be 21, they can stand on their own feet, but give them a chance to get some education first."

Other senators feel that the army has an obligation to put its house in order before it demands drafting of 18- and 19-year-olds.

"An officer is supposed to set an example to the enlisted man," commented Sen. Ed Johnson of Colorado. "An example of upright living. Some of the examples set by officers in Germany are shocking. Until they clean house they can't expect us to be enthusiastic about the draft."

CASE BILL BOOMERANGS

Some of the GOP southern coalition who stamped the Case anti-strike bill through the house are singing a different tune in the cloakrooms since the Illinois primary election returns have come in.

One of the most significant battles in this primary was in the district represented by GOP Con. Robert B. Chiperfield of Canton, Ill., an all-out advocate of the Case bill.

A fourth-termer, Chiperfield boasts that never before has he been opposed in a primary election. However, it was different this year. The Illinoisan not only had an opponent, but he was renominated only by the skin of his teeth — approximately 1,300 votes.

Chiperfield makes no bones to close friends about the reason for his tight squeak.

"My support of the Case bill came darn close to licking me," he admitted in the GOP cloakroom. "That was the main issue of the campaign."

DIPLOMATIC CHAFF

The Russian Trade mission to Argentina is not on a brief visit. The Russians brought their families and are prepared to negotiate a long-term trade deal, especially trying to buy the Argentine linseed oil crop. If they succeed, the American home-building program for veterans will be very, short of paint. . . . The United States and Great Britain are pressing for an early election in Romania — which the Russians don't seem to want but others do.

Cast of Characters:

Midnight Susie, the hag who haunts the Main Stem. . . . She claims she was one of Broadway's glamour gals decades ago. . . . The beefy lady-bouncer in a 3rd Avenue gin-mill who tames the toughest bores by merely talking to them.

Tin-Pan Alley's song-scribbling cynics who grind out America's most tender romantic ballads. . . . The 52nd Street barkeep who entertains barflies with sleight-of-hand card tricks. . . . The two bartenders at the Stork Club, whose tips were so plentiful they've just bought their own joint. . . . The gambler who carries past-performance records of the racehorses in a brief case. . . . The pretty red-haired shoe-shine gal near Grand Central Station.

The Union Square soap-boxer who peddles carrot juice as a health-giver. . . . The uppity Park Avenue bookie who accepts bets only from the snobbish set. . . . The poet who squats near the East River in the 50s all day — composing verses which he gives to children. . . . Crowds of do-nothings huddled near corner cigar stores tensely watching a nickel-matching contest. . . . The exclusive tailor in the New York Stock Exchange. . . . The Mulberry Street puppeteers—one of the city's most arresting free shows. . . . Workers in subway change booths who rarely take their orbs off books they read, while mechanically dishing out jitneys.

The miserable matinee idol who totes a torch for a famed actress, usually mobbed by clawtographers. . . . The peanut stand man whose stand is covered with photos of celebs — autographed! . . . The prune-faced lady (in the Fifties) handing out slips of paper with Scriptural passages on them. . . . Sidewalk hawkers who sell books, mags, ties and kitchen utensils. One-man department stores. . . . Sleuths in railroad terminals keeping their eyes peeled for muggs with police records arriving from the hinterland. . . . Ladies who put a coat over their nighties and take their pups for an airing every dawning along Madison Ave.

Quiteso, Quiteso: Ted Breton reminds us that Maurice Barrymore loaned his presence to vaudeville for one consecutive 3-day run. It was at the Olympic in Chicago. . . . One matinee Maurice dashed off the stage and into the manager's office. . . . "See here!" Maurice see-here'd. "I cannot continue. They just don't get me. I cannot please your audience!"

Manager George Castle calmly comforted: "Don't try. Just draw 'em in. The nobodies on the program always give the show."

Worse'n the Electric Chair: Jack Haley was listening to a newcomer in Movietown, who was discussing international events. . . . "The worst moment I ever had," he said, "was when I saw Gromyko walk out on the U. N." . . . "Then," said Haley, "you haven't really lived. Wait'll you see Louella Parsons walking out in the middle of the preview of your first picture!"

Bob Benchley was also irked by literary pirates who aped his yarns. He brushed them off this way: "Anyone who is stupid enough to steal ideas—isn't smart enough to steal the good ones!"

Americans who have recently returned from Spain inform us that the Spanish undergrounders have launched a campaign of ridicule similar to the one that flourished in Germany when Hitler was in power. Frixample: Night after night the walls in an industrial section of Madrid are daubed with anti-fascist inscriptions. In vain the Spanish soldiers hunted for the authors of this outrage. One day, a tired and enraged soldier wrote under one of the slogans on the wall: "Why don't you do it in broad daylight, you cowards?"

The next day there was an answer: "Sorry, but in the daytime we are too busy parading with you fellows!"

Heywood Broun was an optimist who believed that men of good will would some day build a world of peace and prosperity. But there were times when tragic news left him glum.

A friend who was with Broun when he was depressed heard him mutter: "This world started from chaos and it will end in chaos. What happens in between does not seem to matter very much."

When an interviewer asked H. L. Mencken what he thought of love at first sight, Menck snapped: "It's a labor-saving device!"

A foreign newsboy tells us that the black market has dominated Europe's economy so long, Europeans now have a standard joke about it. "Countries should concentrate," they say, "on building jails and lunatic asylums. The former are for the people who buy in the black market—the latter are for those who don't."

Granting Loan to Britain Would Benefit U. S. Business

FROM observations this reporter has made in the hearings on the proposed British loan it appears that opposition is coming largely from the same sources which were definitely pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists.

To the uninitiated the arguments pro and con on this proposed $3,750,000,000 loan are confusing. They are involved with high finance and foreign trade, with the sterling bloc, the export cycles, with international credit and many other factors which only experts at that sort of thing can readily perceive.

Stripped down to everyday language, however, here are the potent factors: (1) We are actually merely extending Britain a line of credit to the amount of $3,750,000,000; (2) She can draw on this credit until December 31, 1951, and pays us back in 50 equal installments with interest at 2 per cent; she must pay the principal installment every year and (3) Britain agrees to open up to unrestrained American trade the entire British Commonwealth of South Africa, India, Australia, the British Isles and every place else where sterling is the rate of exchange to American business and American dollars and she cannot obtain a loan from any third country until after 1951. Now that's what we give and Britain promises.

What do we get back? We get our money back, plus interest, plus $650,000,000 of lend-lease balance, plus increased exports to Britain and the British Commonwealth, plus payment in dollars, plus no discriminatory import restrictions against the U. S., plus paying a portion of her debts to other nations in American dollars giving other countries more money with which to buy American goods, plus support of the American proposals for getting world trade going through an International Trade Organization.

We Would Gain Much

Now why is this loan important to the average business man and farmer in the small towns of the country? There are four reasons: (1) We must have an expanding foreign trade to keep our high productive capacity on farm and factory going full tilt; (2) Britain and the British Commonwealth of Nations were our best customers before the war . . . they took 42 per cent of our trade; (3) an expanding foreign trade among nations can't happen unless Britain can pay her war debts and can be put on an economically sound basis, for though we have a huge war debt, we owe no one but the American people, whereas Britain owes other nations and (4) without economic security of other nations, fostered by expanding world trade, there can be no insurance of world peace. And a fifth reason is that Britain, our ally, took an unmerciful pounding costing thousands of British lives, to save American lives while we were getting prepared for war.

The argument is made that Britain did not pay her debt to us after World War I. She did pay back 434 million dollars in principal and 1½ billion dollars in interest before the world depression caught her. The argument also is made that to make this loan will cause some inflation here and the answer is that Britain only wants goods which come from our war-expanded industries and commodities of which we have surpluses and moreover, if she spends it all here, it would only amount to five-tenths of 1 per cent of the total demand for goods and services in this country over an anticipated five-year period.

Let Britain sell her holdings in this country, is another argument of the isolationists. But she has only 585 million dollars in unpledged assets in this country, and in addition she is borrowing 1½ billion dollars from Canada at 2 per cent, the only other country which has dollars.

Another argument is, why should we loan our dollars to a socialist nation? Well, there is a question of whether or not England really is socialist. Even if it is, nevertheless it is the Bank of England that finances the British government with internal loans. Most certainly an expanding world trade and attending prosperity will tend to strengthen rather than weaken the free enterprise system, even in England. So the British loan will not subsidize socialism in England.

And the argument that to make a loan to Britain will open the door to applications for other nations. This is answered in this fashion. . . . UNRRA will take care of relief loans. The International Bank will take care of long-term reconstruction and development loans and the U. S. Import-Export bank will help finance American foreign trade.

British financiers have told house majority leader Barkley that they cannot enter the international bank or the monetary fund unless the loan is granted without "strings."

time control over textile manufacturers and granted additional price increases to increase the output of cheaper material.

To assure supplies of certain cheaper material, the Civilian Production administration ordered mills to employ the same number of spindles for specified cotton yarns as they did on December 31, 1945. As a result, production for shirts, shorts, work clothes, men's suits, hosiery, sewing thread, toweling and cotton duck is expected to increase to 235 million pounds for each remaining quarter of this year.

At the same time, the OPA ordered manufacturers to set aside from 30 to 85 per cent of certain types of cotton yarn to meet the needs for knit hosiery and underwear; woolen and worsted fabrics and agricultural and industrial goods.

Together with earlier increases for cotton fabric, a 5 per cent boost in price ceilings for combed and carded yarns is designed to help achieve a 50 per cent rise in output of such essential items as work clothes, wearing apparel and agricultural and industrial goods.

DIVORCES:

Throughout the English - speaking world the astronomical increase in divorce brought on as an aftermath of World War II gave rise to general alarms and revolutionary outlooks upon marriage and the family, Prof. Ernest R. Groves has stated in an article prepared for the Encyclopedia Britannica.

Whereas in 1914 there had been 600 divorces in all England, in 1945 in London alone there were 4,000 divorce cases waiting to be heard.

Professor Groves lists the causes of the great boom in divorce mills as imprudent, hasty marriages, marriages made for such ulterior motives as receiving government allowances allotted to wives of servicemen, "passion marriages" and marriages that had no proper start because of the hectic circumstances before the husbands went overseas.

Another factor contributing its part to marital breakups was unfaithfulness of wives, either real or imagined by servicemen returning from overseas.

POLITICS:

Party Line

Addressing the National Citizens' Political Action committee in San Francisco, Calif., Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace raised the age-old American political question of party loyalty, declaring that congressmen who renounce their party program should be disciplined.

Stating that even Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover had subscribed to the principle of party loyalty, Wallace said that once the party had agreed upon an issue, each congressional member should go along.

No Mistaking 'Jerk' Now

Though it is supposed that present-day Americans know what a "jerk" is—especially if they themselves happen to be annoyed by a bothersome person—they will be able to find the meaning of the expression in the new 150,000 word abridged Funk and Wagnalls dictionary to appear this fall.

Mercifully defining a "jerk" as "an unpopular person," the word is just one of several flippant but widely used expressions to be listed in the dictionary. Thumbing the pages, a reader also will find:

Jive—The jargon of swing music; also swing music.

Corn—Trite, banal, especially jazz rendered in a sweet or sentimental manner.

Cheesecake—A photograph featuring a girl's legs.

Snafu — Situation normal, all fouled up.

While on food study tour of Europe, Herbert Hoover visited fish market in Copenhagen, Denmark, where supplies are plentiful. Because of lack of transportation, surplus fish have to be dumped in sea.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Food Shipments Will Help Write the Peace in Europe

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Since Good Friday, when you heard a President and an ex-President speaking on the same radio program, one in the White House, the other across the Atlantic in Egypt, you have read and heard many other appeals in preparation for a drive which will start shortly to get food to five hundred million starving men, women and children in Europe and Asia.

The voluntary effort to cut down food consumption simply hasn't worked.

It isn't that the people are unwilling. It's that there was no immediate way to cut down on our eating which seemed practical. And so a practical means of getting food in cans is to be tried, and its success will depend on the local volunteer organization in your community. The foods needed are milk (condensed, evaporated or dried), meat, fish, peanut butter, baby foods, baked beans, juices, stews, soups, honey, vegetables.

I know that you have heard this before in detail. I hope you will hear it again, with further details, but perhaps you don't realize what you and the United States can get in return for the food we send out, and what we may lose if starvation becomes widespread.

The whole question is pointed up in a not-too-prominently displayed dispatch from Moscow to which an official called my attention last week. It was a statement made by a correspondent of the Soviet paper Izvestia, who had been touring the American zone in Germany.

"The food stuff difficulties which forced lowering of rations (in the American zone)," the correspondent wrote, "are explained, in my view, not so much by the absence of productive districts as by a lack of order and distribution of agricultural products." Then he went on to explain that the big estates had not been broken up, as they were in the Russian zone.

Hunger Used as Political Weapon

This criticism, which I think investigation will prove to be exceedingly biased and unfair, reveals how food, or the lack of it, is serving and can serve as a weapon to stir up discontent and to bring the western countries into disrepute and disfavor.

Revolution follows hunger just as surely as hunger follows war.

As a matter of fact, one of the most efficient organizations in the American military zone of Germany is the agency which distributes food. Working closely with it is another highly efficient American agency which the British have used as a model in their zone—the health and sanitation division.

However, there is a food shortage in Germany, just as there is in the rest of Europe. The effects are the same everywhere, and Germany serves as an excellent example of the political effects of a good shortage. There, the American authorities can accurately check on what is going on since the military government is so closely tied in to every phase of the daily lives of the people.

Recently a military government official in Germany wrote to me: "No slogan was ever truer than 'Food will win the war and write the peace.' "

We are about to sit down at the peace table with Italy. Russia probably will not be present. But the food that Italy does not have may affect the validity of that peace treaty.

A revealing comment on how this works was appended to a report made shortly after the British were forced to drop to a 1,000-calorie scale and coal production dropped approximately 20 per cent. This was the comment:

"Heavy workers are dropping at their work and food riots have already taken place. If this ration is not raised soon, there will be no coal; without coal there will be no transportation; without coal and transportation, there will be no processing of food from indigenous resources.

"The fact that we now have to go back on our pledged word to the German people will seriously impair our prestige and the confidence of the German people in the pledged word of our officials. This will give to those who oppose our economic system the best weapon they have ever received. As fast as possible, we are losing all the advantages gained by the success of arms. We are losing the peace much faster than at the close of World War I. The first great blow has been the food muddle. Others will pile up like a snowball. . . .

"It appears that we will have to reduce the already inadequate ration for Berlin. This, of course, will give the Russians a strong talking point against the western powers when we cannot afford to sustain the 1,550-calorie ration for the normal consumer."

And so the path of our friend, the reporter from Izvestia, crosses that of the American official. Clearly we see the different segments of the picture which opponents of western democracy have sketched in no faint strokes across the troubled world.

Yes, indeed, food will write the peace!

A FRIEND WHO LEARNED TO BELIEVE

LESSON TEXT—John 11: 7, 8, 16; 20: 24-29.

MEMORY SELECTION — Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.—John 20:29.

Doubt and faith—both seem to come to the hearts and minds of men. Yet they are directly contradictory to one another and cannot exist together. To believe is to drive out doubt, and when doubt comes in, faith loses its grip.

Thomas, and his experience following the resurrection of our Lord, presents a lesson on what a man can do to meet honest doubt and how such a man can come out into the sunshine of faith.

We find in Thomas, first, an expression of

I. Fearless Loyalty (John 11:7, 8, 16).

Unafraid of the threats of men, Jesus was about to go once more into Judea. On his last two visits there, the Jews had sought to kill him, namely, at the feast of tabernacles (John 8:59) and at the feast of dedication (John 10:31).

He was not one to draw back for the fear of men when the Father's will led him forward in his service to humanity. Lazarus was dead, and Mary and Martha needed him and he was going to them.

Then came a fine expression of the loyalty of Thomas. If his Lord was going to face death, he was willing to go along and die with him. Let us recognize that here was a man of real courage, willing to show his loyalty even by giving his life.

There is something fine about that attitude, and something which shows us that when this man later expressed doubt, it was not the silly and shallow unbelief of a trifler. This man loved the Lord and served him, and yet he failed him.

When we think we are strong, we had better watch out lest we fail. Let us be clear and triumphant in our declaration of loyalty to Christ, both by word and by life. And then let us set a double guard against the enemy of our souls.

Thomas next appears in

II. Faithless Failure (John 16:24, 25).

He had been willing to die for his Lord, or with him, but now the Lord had been taken by wicked hands and crucified. He and the disciples were alone to face a hostile world; at least so it seemed to them.

The awful day of crucifixion preyed heavily upon the mind of Thomas. That is evident from verse 25. He had been thinking of those awful bleeding wounds, and had forgotten about the promises of resurrection.

Jesus died, and that is a precious truth; but one must not stop there, for a dead Saviour is no Saviour at all. Thomas got sidetracked in his thinking. Let us not make the same mistake.

Another reason for his failure was that he did not go to the meeting of his brethren. Perhaps he did not feel like going, and did not think it was any use to go. Ah, but that's just the time one needs the fellowship of other believers. Go, and you will meet the Lord!

The Lord was there and Thomas missed him. We, too, will miss the Lord and his blessing if we stay away from his house and the meeting of his people.

Having gone thus far in discouraged unbelief, it was easy for Thomas to take the next step and demand physical proof of the resurrection. His despondency had now reached the place of making unreasonable demands and of discrediting the witness of others.

We are glad that we can close our study on the note of renewed faith and of

III. Full Confession (John 16:26-29).

Note that the Lord was ready fully to meet the demands of Thomas, even though they were on the unreasonable side. That was undoubtedly because he knew the essential fineness and trueness of Thomas.

His doubts were unfortunate and entirely unnecessary, but they were genuine. No real doubter will ever remain one long, for if he brings a genuine doubt to the Lord, he will find it fully met. It is the triflers, those who use their doubts to hide their sins, and those who are unwilling to bring their dark thoughts into the light of the presence of Jesus, who go on doubting year after year.

Notice the comment of Jesus following the glad and complete confession of faith by Thomas. It is a good thing to believe because one has seen and been convinced. That is proper and blessed.

But the real fullness of blessing comes to the one who can rise to faith in Christ because of his word, quite apart from the visible or tangible evidence. This is real Christian faith which declares Christ to be our Lord and our God, the one whom having not seen, we love (I Pet. 1:8).

The local band at Dumferline, its ranks sadly depleted due to spring colds, was making a brave but futile effort to provide acceptable music for a holiday crowd gathered in the public park on Memorial Day.

After one particularly bad rendition, an elderly gentleman made his way up to the stand and inquired of the director: "What was that piece you just played, mister?"

"That," was the solemn reply, "was the 'Death of Nelson.' "

"I can well believe that, Mr. Bandmaster," was the matter-of-fact rejoiner. "But tell me the name of it anyhow."

Bowles, in effect, urged individual manufacturers and merchants to repudiate the view of the National Association of Manufacturers and other organized business groups reflected in the house-approved price control extension bill which would cripple the Office of Price Administration.

Appeal Made on Radio.

His appeal was made in a nation-wide broadcast a few hours after the Chamber of Commerce of the United States had asked the senate banking and currency committee to end all price controls, with the exception of rent, on October 31, and for the elimination of rent control on March 31, 1947.

Bowles expressed doubt that the "various minority groups" — the N.A.M., the chamber of commerce and other organizations—accurately represented the viewpoint of a majority of industrialists and other business men.

Word from Sarasota, Fla., where rent ceilings were abolished on January 1, indicates that rents have jumped from 30 to 100 per cent. Roger G. Flory, who was active in ousting rent control in Sarasota, declares such advances have been exceptions, but many returning servicemen disagree with him.

At Kansas City, the OPA has charged that the big packers have gone on a buying strike and are "just refusing to buy" cattle for slaughter. In Chicago, W. S. Clithero, vice president of Armour and company, immediately wired Chester Bowles that the charges were unfounded.

With typical American ingenuity, the Sands of Chicago, Ill., solved housing shortage by buying old street car for $200 and converting it into dwelling. This is one of several hundred old trolley cars which were sold by a street railway company to veterans rather than burn them as usually done.

Is D-X Motor Oil
A BETTER OIL?
Than the old Diamond 760 Motor Oil? Definitely yes!
It retains the outstanding performance features of Diamond 760 but is a greatly improved oil of a higher quality. It has a higher Viscosity Index, a greater chemical stability, and resistance to decomposition or breakdown. In addition, it contains bearing corrosion inhibitor, an oxidation inhibitor and a mild detergent— recently developed chemical compounds which give D-X additional performance.

THE HOUSE THAT ROCK ISLAND BUILT....
Sooner!

Three million homes wanted : : : right now! That's a big order, even for a nation like ours, that gets things done in a hurry. In addition to new homes, thousands of families are planning to remodel their present homes . . . install new bathrooms, new lighting systems, model kitchens . . . with all the labor-saving appliances they've been reading about and saving for.

It's a tremendous challenge—to the building trades who are hampered by labor shortages, to manufacturers and mills where many materials are still critically scarce, a challenge also to rail transportation, which links supplier and builder together . . . because only the railroads are equipped to handle the tons of steel, brick, lumber, appliances, and countless other items used in the building program.

Serving this community, ROCK ISLAND stands ready with the manpower, the equipment, and the "know-how" to deliver those needed building materials on time to your contractor. Rely on ROCK ISLAND to have your house built . . . soon!

Our dealers join us in making this frank report

THE FARMERS OF AMERICA

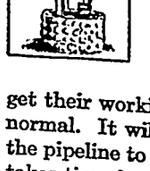
INTERNATIONAL Harvester is getting back into production with all possible speed. Extra shifts are being employed wherever conditions permit, to try to overcome the production losses of the recent strike. Everything is being done to get parts and machines to you.

While we and our dealers would like to tell you that this means an immediate end to the shortage of service parts and machines, it is more accurate to say that it means the beginning of the end of it. If illness or bad weather delays you seriously in the Spring, you know how much it throws you off your schedule. The strike has thrown our schedules off balance, too. There are many "chores" we must do before new machines reach you.

Material shortages

The preliminary chores of getting our plants back into shape for full production are finished. But disturbances in other industries and resulting material shortages may affect our plans. Light gauge steel sheets, brass and copper, fractional horse power motors, and many other items are all very short. The coal situation may also prove serious—we hope not.

Refilling the well



Both our dealers and our branches have run dry on parts and new machines. So the biggest chore is to get their working stocks back to normal. It will take time to fill the pipeline to dealers—just as it takes time for you to refill a well or cistern after it has run dry.

Stock and display rooms of our dealers represent not one, but ten thousand reservoirs which must be refilled. The most heroic production efforts will mean that your local dealer can expect only a small number of parts and machines at a time. Since we must play fair with all our customers, there will be a sprinkle of parts and machines all over the country—not a downpour in any one section.

You will be glad to know that all repair parts production schedules are far beyond normal.

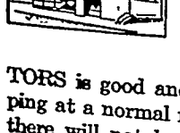
No hoarding

You may be sure that every machine will be shipped to dealers as soon as completed. We do not and will not hold machines off the market.

At the start of the strike we had on hand at all our factories and branches just 837 tractors of all kinds—less than two days' production—and 405 of these were not completed. Many of those on hand had one or more important parts missing—principally radiator cores. Most of the rest represented the normal daily "float" between the end of the assembly line and the shipping platform. Naturally no tractors were made during the strike.

What dealers may have for you



We can report to you that our current production on TRACTORS is good and we are shipping at a normal rate. Even so, there will not be enough to go around. The situation on PLOWS and DISK HARROWS is notably good. On COMBINES, MOWERS, HAY RAKES, CORN PICKERS and many other machines our schedules have been seriously disrupted. We must in fairness say that many of our customers are likely to be disappointed in delivery of these machines. MILKING MACHINES, STATIONARY ENGINES, and other small units we are confident of making practically normal delivery.

We know you will understand the reasons why your dealer cannot fill your orders overnight. He would like to give you the best delivery on machines you would like to get, but his situation is a difficult one and not of his own making. He is doing the best he can.

No cutting corners on quality

There is one thing you can be absolutely certain about: INTERNATIONAL will NOT cut corners on quality in order to increase production in this emergency. For years we have had "QUALITY IS THE FOUNDATION OF OUR BUSINESS." Today we say it—and mean it as much as ever.

We know you need new machines—and need them soon. But we believe it will pay you to wait just a little while if you cannot get all you want immediately. By waiting you can be sure your new equipment will have the quality so highly associated with INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER for so many son of Peter and Katherine Merkel was born on the 10th day of August, 1899 at Paton, Greene County, Iowa. He was baptized in the Beaver Lutheran Church near Paton where his parents were members. He attended the public and religious schools during his boyhood days and grew to manhood in his home community.

OBITUARY OF ALFRED MERKEL

He was united in marriage to Miss Winifred Glanville of Klemme, September 21, 1921. During the first 6 years of their married life Mr. and Mrs. Merkel engaged in farming in different places around Klemme. In 1927 Mr. Merkel bought a cream route, located in the town of Klemme, and at the time of his death he was the senior cream hauler of our local creamery. Three years ago he began operating the Standard Gas station during his spare time.

Two children, a son and a daughter were born to this union. Corrine is a student at State Teachers College, Cedar Falls, a member of the graduating class. Dean is with the armed forces and is stationed at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri.

Mr. Merkel was a faithful employee of the Klemme Creamery and will be missed by the patrons whom he served. They and his many friends will remember him as a good natured man and pleasant companion.

On Saturday morning, May 18th, he left home, seemingly in good health. After loading cream at the Dan Fjetland farm southwest of Klemme, he suffered a sudden heart attack and died before medical help could reach him. He attained the age of 46 years, 9 months and 8 days.

Surviving him and mourning his death are his wife and two children, Corrine and Dean; his mother, Mrs. Peter Merkel of Klemme; three brothers, Ben of Camache, Iowa, Walter, of Lohrville, Iowa, and Lester, of Radcliffe, Iowa; three sisters, Mrs. John Lee and Mrs. Ed. Christians, both of Klemme, and Mrs. George Gahn of Radcliffe, Iowa. One sister, Mrs. Lloyd Ulrich preceded him in death.

Legs and Inflation

Milady's legs have a bearing on inflation, reconversion, prosperity and economics. Those "gams," it seems, are definitely related to the state of the union.

By being a little skimpy on clothes a girl may be helping America over the crest and hastening a more stable economic order. The less she wears the more she may be lessening the burdens of the President, his cabinet, OPA, the Democratic National committee and perhaps the Big Three.

All of which is apparent from the news that the subject of one inch more or less of the female knee has been causing huddles and debates in Washington. Whether or not to lengthen skirts has been agitating the Civilian Price Control administration and its advisory committees no end.

The advisory committee have suggested that Washington permit skirts to be an inch longer, but CPA has been extra cautious. Even a half inch more of leg may mean millions of yards of skirt material. Hence the committee sessions, administration conferences, policy makers' huddles and frantic debates among national leaders, lobbyists, congressmen, etc.

President Truman's "Hold the Line!" ultimatum may be taken as applying to the kneecap of American womanhood. (Harry has not personally made any public announcement of his convictions on knees. But unofficially he is said to believe them a good thing for the nation.—Ed. note.)

But the news that they figure in OPA ceilings, inflation problems, etc., and that OPA and CPA are in fact right in milady's boudoir, and that Chet Bowles thinks the legs of our women are definitely involved in the war to stop runaway inflation comes as news to most people.

The United States Agricultural Department's Division of Marketing and Transportation Research incidentally reports that the length of skirts is a barometer for depressions and prosperity. Possibly along this line:

Full length skirts . . . Hard times.

Two inches above ankles . . . Things picking up.

Four inches above . . . Carloadings improve. Bankruptcies decline.

Six inches . . . Stock market rallies.

Eight inches . . . Splitups and extra dividends. Republicans see chance to get back into power.

Ten inches . . . Barney Baruch suspends park bench deliberations.

Up to knee . . . Dangerous boom. Golf club membership rise to $2,500 a head. War clouds in Europe.

One inch above knee . . . War. Reconversion. Inflation.

Bibliomaniac Bought and Stored 800,000 Books

One of the greatest cases of bibliomania on record was that of Antoine Boulard of Paris in the early 19th century, says Collier's. Unlike others affected with this uncontrollable passion for acquiring books, not for reading but for mere possession, Boulard was not interested in quality, rarity or subject matter—only in quantity.

Being wealthy, he retired from business at the age of 49 and devoted the last 20 years of his life to this mania, during which time he secretly bought and stored in five empty houses more than 800,000 books.

How to CHANGE A TIRE AT NIGHT...

More Quickly—
More Safely!

1 Few motorists can chan a tire at night wit top speed, efficiency—an safety! Night tire-changin can be hazardous—bu "Eveready" flashlights ca reduce the danger. Fir principle, says the Amer can Automobile Assn., is...

2 Park off the highway if you can possibly do so. Next best place is on a straight stretch of road. If you must park on a curve, a light should be set on the road some distance back. Be sure neither you nor a bystander blocks off the view of your tail-light!

3 Keep all your tire-changing tools tied or boxed together, where you can pick them up without searching. Remove your spare before jacking up car; removing it later might push car off jack. If alone, set flashlight on a stone in convenient position.

4 In your car or at home—wherever you need a flashlight—rely only on "Eveready" batteries. Ask for them by name. For "Eveready" batteries have no equals . . . that's why you'll find them in more flashlights than any other battery in the world!

Indian Fighter Dies at Tulsa; His Age, 105

TULSA, OKLA.—During his life, six wars were fought. He knew personally such historical characters as General Custer, Geronimo, the Indian Apache chief, and Jesse James, the outlaw. He recently died here at the age of 105.

William Franklin Knight, who observed his 105th birthday last February 17, was born on a steamboat at Louisiana, Mo. He went to Texas in 1866 as an advance guard for stage coaches. Later he rode for the Wells-Fargo express from St. Louis west.

He was wounded four times by bullets and once when Comanche Indians pierced his neck with arrows. In September, 1870, after the Comanches had burned telegraph wires between two cities, Knight rode from Fort Worth to El Paso, carrying government messages. He used 33 horses on the trip and slept only two hours during the five days it took.

In the early seventies, when buffalo roamed the southwest plains country, Knight shipped as many as 10 000 buffalo hides at one time to eastern markets.

Knight moved to Tulsa in 1918 and was employed by a local transfer company. He worked until he was 99 years of age before retiring. He kept house for himself until forced to enter a convalescent home because of infirmities. No immediate relatives have been located.

AIRMONT, MINN. — When the rmont Daily Sentinel got to wonng who had lived the longest on the same farm in this lo- y, Mrs. E. G. Swanson of Dun- did a little investigating and covered that:

Ellsworth Ziemer still lives on the e Fremont farm where he was n in 1895; C. L. Peterson still ns the place where he was born, 1890; but top honors go to F. S. Carlson, who was born Decem- 1874, on a farm near Dunnell, still lives there with his wife son, making over 71 years on same farm.

One-Third of U. S. Population Has No Access to Libraries

WASHINGTON.—Two solons have stated that almost one-third of the people of the United States, or "more than 35,000,000 persons, nearly all of them in rural areas, have no access to libraries."

Because of that situation, the lawmakers, Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama and Rep. Emily Taft Douglas of Illinois, have introduced identical bills simultaneously in the house and senate calling for annual federal grants of $25,000 to each state for use of state library associations in rural areas.

The bill also empowers states to provide additional funds up to a maximum of $50,000 annually for such work, which the federal government would match.

While no federal control or administration is involved, annual reports would be called for and states would qualify for funds by preparing plans and submitting them to the United States commissioner of education.

The statistics show there are 586 counties without any public library service. The greatest number, 150 counties, are in Texas. Kentucky is second with 63 counties with no library, and Louisiana and Mississippi are third, with 35 counties each.

In only 11 states does every county have a public library. They are Connecticut, Delaware, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Osage Ranchers to Hold Meet in June

PAWHUSKA, OKLA.—The 10th annual convention of the Osage Cattlemen's association, an event known throughout the Southwest, has been scheduled for June 21 and 22, it has been announced by Gartner Drummond, president of the association.

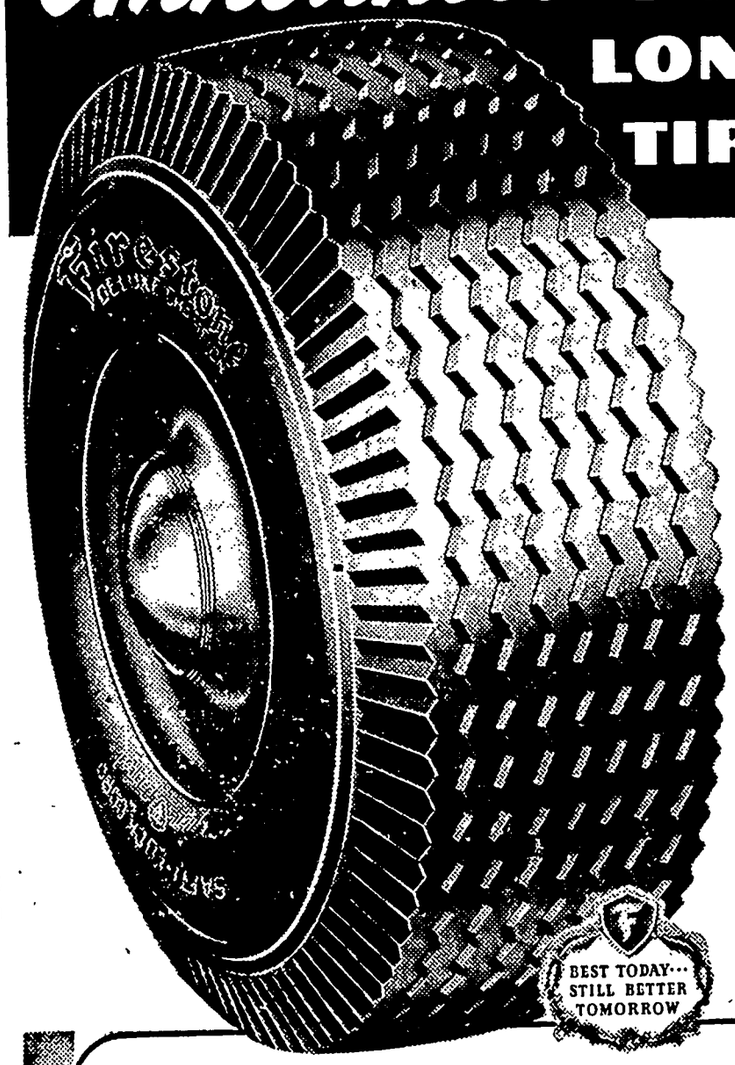
Held in the heart of a famous bluegrass pastureland, the meeting will feature a barbecue and a cowboy dance. This year a large attendance is expected when cattlemen from several surrounding states will hear experts on modern ranching methods.

There is one fly in the ointment, however, and President Drummond is scratching his head for an answer. With a much larger attendance than ever before expected, finding sufficient accommodations is developing into a major problem.

The hospitality of this community has never failed in the past, and Drummond is banking on the neighborliness of Pawhuska more than ever, he admits. Anyway, cattlemen can bunk most any place if they have to, Drummond states.

Servicemen found seven wild puppies near Hollywood, brought them to canteen so they would have a home.

Firestone
Announces THE SAFEST AND LONGEST WEARING TIRE EVER BUILT



RAYON CORD AT REGULAR PRICE!

UP TO 55% STRONGER
New Rayon Cord Safti-Sured Body* Gives Extra Protection Against Blowouts

UP TO 60% MORE NON-SKID ANGLES
New Safti-Grip Tread Provides Extra Protection Against Skidding

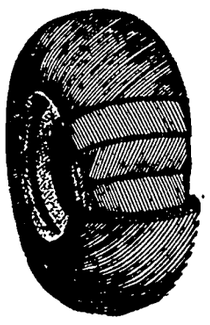
UP TO 32% LONGER MILEAGE . . .
Wear-Resistant Vitamic Rubber in both the Tread and the Cord Body Assures Extra Protection Against Weather and Wear

INSTEAD of merely substituting a rayon cord body for cotton cord in a previous tire design, Firestone especially engineered this tire to take full advantage of the extra strength of rayon. As a result, Firestone research has created a revolutionary new tire, tested and proved by millions of miles of service — a tire that's new in design, new in materials, new in performance — YET IT SELLS AT REGULAR PRICE. See this new Firestone De Luxe Champion Tire at your nearby Firestone Dealer Store or Firestone Store TODAY!

Rayon cord bodies in size 6.50 and larger, extra strong cotton cord bodies in smaller sizes until more Rayon is available.*

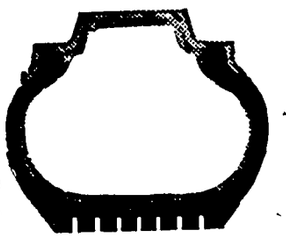
HERE'S WHY THE NEW FIRESTONE DELUXE CHAMPION STAYS SAFER LONGER

Rayon fibers are locked together by the Firestone Safti-Lock process, then Gum-Dipped and calendered with Vitamic Rubber. Safti-Sured Construction welds all parts of the tire into an inseparable unit for EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS.



The new Safti-Grip Tread has up to 60% more non-skid angles for EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING.

New, wider, flatter, silent Safti-Grip tread and large area in contact with the road mean slow, even wear. Precision balance and uniform flexing mean less internal heat. These features assure EXTRA MILEAGE!



THE ONLY TIRES MADE THAT ARE SAFETY PROVED ON THE SPEEDWAY FOR YOUR PROTECTION ON THE HIGHWAY

To The Voters
OF HANCOCK COUNTY
At a recent meeting of the Hancock County Republican Womans Club, a speaker brought out the point that only a small percentage of the eligible voters in Iowa avail themselves of the privilege of voting at the Primaries.
Our Government is trying to teach certain foreign countries the way to a Democratic Form of Government, arrived at by free elections.
We, here in the United States, have always had this privilege.
Let us all use it in the forthcoming Iowa Primaries by turning out and vote.
If I have not personally contacted you in the past several weeks, it was because I did not find enough time to be away from my job to see everyone; but I assure you that your support will be highly appreciated.

AROUND IOWA

KILLED IN FALL

Ben T Jabering, Austinville, retired from the farm a few years ago. Recently he was back on the job to help his brother-in-law, who was thrown from a tractor and killed. At Redfield, a tractor rolled over twice with Gene Berry. He was only slightly brused.

CALLED HOME

Fred Schwery of Harlan was aroused one morning at six a. m. recently by the telephone ringing. It was his son Paul, now in the army, calling home from Switzerland.

DIFFERENT TUNE

Robert Smith, Toledo, has a car with a musical horn. For tooting it unnecessarily in the late houres, he was fined $14 35 by Mayor Carnal and instructed to toot no more.

STICK TOGETHER

Neither war nor peace have separated two Harlan chums Clifford Wigness and Harry McGee. They entered service at the same time, took basic training together, sailed to the Philippines together, sailed to Honshu together. They came back on different ships but are now employed in the same shop in Harlan.

LIVE AND LEARN

At Whittemore, a housewife has learned a few things about dried apples. After simmering them in water, she put the apples in a pie, was surprised to look in the oven a little later and find the pie about five inches high and still going up.

DIDN'T LIKE IT

Residents of Eagle Grove complained recently about the "terrible taste" of the city water. They were surprised to find that due to difficulties the water treatment plant had been temporarily out of order and the evil-tasting water was simply the "raw water" that Eagle Grove residents used to drink and like before the water plant was installed.

GOOD NEIGHBOR POLICY

In a recent fire, Mrs. Mamie McGlothin, lost her brooder and chicken house. Neighbors got together, gave a "chicken shower" of 40 hens and some cash to help replace the loss.

Hit Entry Plan

Arab reaction to the recommendation of the Anglo-American committee of inquiry on Palestine that 100,000 European Jews be admitted into the Holy Land immediately was strong and bitter, with leaders warning of strife and a swing toward Russia in the middle east.

In branding the committee's plan as a betrayal of Arab rights, Arab leaders vowed they would resist its implementation and warned that repercussions might be heard throughout the entire middle-eastern Arab world with its 33 million people. Because the western powers showed a disposition to ignore the centuries-old dominant Arab population and culture of Palestine, they said, they might be compelled to turn to Russia for recognition.

To be acted upon by the American and British governments before its implementation, the committee's plan called for the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews to Palestine and a relaxation of barriers in other countries to accommodate some of the victims of persecution in Europe.

Neither Jew nor Arab are to dominate Palestine, with interests of the Christian as well as Moslem and Jewish faiths protected. Restrictions on land transfers would be removed and replaced by freedom in the sale, lease or use of land, irrespective of race, community or creed.

Pending the creation of a United Nations trusteeship to rule the country, the present British mandate government would be retained to preserve order and prevent an Arab or Jewish movement for domination.

FOREIGN MINISTERS:
Discuss Reich

Pushed by the U. S. to permit Germany to return to a self-supporting basis and aid in the revival of the war-shattered European economy, Big Four talks on the postwar status of the Reich headed up the foreign ministers' meeting in Paris.

Though the conference originally was called to speed up formulation of peace treaties with Italy and other former German satellites, the pressing need for early reconstruction of the continent led to consideration of the problem of the Reich. Seeking to reassure Russian fears of a revived Germany, the U. S. proposed a four-power control plan for Germany to cover 25 years and guard against rearmament.

Joining with the U. S. in consideration of a unified Reich confined to non-military production, British leaders declared that division of Germany would encourage redevelopment of another nationalist movement. Advocating retention of the industrial Ruhr and Rhineland in the Reich to help bolster its economy, they proposed British control over these vital areas until a four-power commission could be set up for permanent supervision.

LABOR:
Strike Threats

With the coal strike reducing industrial operations and necessitating fuel conservation in metropolitan areas, the threat of a railroad walkout loomed as another menace to the nation's productivity.

Following the collapse of negotiations between the carriers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, union heads announced strike plans unless the companies resumed parleys over their demands to negotiate the difference between the 16 cents an hour wage increase awarded by a Presidential fact-finding board and the 25 per cent boost they seek.

Declaring that in some instances, the increase awarded would amount to 13 cents an hour and in others 18 cents, the union heads said they would insist upon the adoption of their demands regardless of who runs the railroads, thus indicating they might balk at government operation.

Meanwhile, federal conciliators worked feverishly in an attempt to break the soft coal deadlock, with the government taking cognizance of the dwindling fuel supply already resulting in reduced industrial operations by ordering railroads to cut passenger service on coal burning trains by 25 per cent and embargoing all freight shipments save for essential commodities.

Jap Women Hot Politicos

Although they have just come into their own in Japanese politics, Nipponese women already are taking their electoral responsibilities with fervor.

Following Mrs. Hatsu Imai's resignation from parliament after her recent election, four of her feminine co-legislators lit into her for quitting because of the press of her domestic duties.

"A betrayal of the electorate," cried Haru Wazaki, an independent from Akita.

"Weak will," snorted Tsuko Yamashita, independent from Kumanoto.

"If she had to quit because of feudalistic expressions around her, I think she should fight against them," averred Shizue Kato, social-democrat from Tokyo. "Destruction of the traditional family system is the key to women's development."

MEAT:
Test Control

With Secretary of Agriculture Anderson calling for the removal of price control on meat if government regulations fail to provide major packers with a sufficient run of stock in the next 90 days, observers waited to see how effective reimposition of slaughter quotas and a revigorated attack upon the black market would be in remedying short supplies.

Declaring that the big companies could not obtain enough cattle at ceiling prices because smaller operators have bid up the market for available stock, Anderson said the government was giving meat control its final test. Though packers were convinced slaughter quotas would not furnish sufficient relief, Anderson said they had proven effective before, and along with a tighter clamp on the black market might route adequate supplies to established companies.

In discussing the meat situation with Anderson during hearings of the senate banking committee on extension of OPA, Senator Barkley (Dem., Ky.) declared that a reliable stockman stated that while he normally slaughtered 7,000 head a week he can now get but 500. Anderson replied the case was typical of the industry as a whole.

Production Down

Farm production of meat animals in 1945 totaled 40.2 billion pounds, about 1.6 billion pounds smaller than the output in 1944 and around 6 billion pounds below the high record in 1943. Production of cattle set a new record and that for hogs was the fourth largest but raising of sheep and lambs was below par.

Gross income from meat animals in 1945 amounted to 6,252 million dollars, nearly equalling the record return in 1943 and 158 million dollars higher than in 1944.

POLIO:

A nationwide poliomyelitis treatment and professional - level training program that will cost upwards of five million dollars has been approved by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and its local chapters.

Of the sum, National Foundation headquarters has allocated $800,000 to train doctors, nurses and physical therapists in the modern treatment and care of polio victims at these centers.

WEATHER:
Long-Range Change

Having experienced a 50-year cycle of warmer weather, the U. S. next may undergo a period of progressively lower temperatures, studies of J. B. Kinger of the weather bureau indicate.

Bringing his charts up to date, Kinger, former chief of the bureau's division of climate and crop weather, found that the 50-year trend toward balmier weather was reversed about five years ago and a continued dip in the temperature would bring a return to the shivery winters of grandpa's days.

Because a trend is established upon mean temperatures over an extended period, evidences of a cycle of colder weather does not mean that it will freeze this summer or next year's snow storms will be worse than last, the bureau pointed out. Further, another 5 or 10 years may be needed to ascertain a definite reversal in atmospheric conditions, it was said.

MOTHERS:
Pick No. 1

Seventy-one year old Mrs. Emma Clarissa Clement of Louisville, Ky., became the first Negress to be named the American mother of the year by the Golden Rule foundation in winning the honor in 1946.

Herself an alumnus of Livingston college, Salisbury, N. C., Mrs. Clement is the mother of seven college graduates. One son is president of Atlanta university, Atlanta, Ga., two others are professors, and a fourth is an army chaplain. She is the widow of a former bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church in Louisville.

Long active in civic affairs, Mrs. Clement is a former national president of the women's society of the African Methodist church; a charter member of the South Commission of Inter-racial Co-operation; secretary of the Negro section of the Kentucky division of the American Field Army cancer society, and statistician of the Kentucky Federation of Women's clubs.

PHILIPPINES:
Friendly Chief

Election of 54-year-old Manuel Roxas as president of the Philippines portended continued good friendship between the islands and the U. S. since the fiery new chieftain has repeatedly advocated close political and economic ties between the two peoples.

Manuel Roxas

Though a prominent leader in the Philippine nationalist movement, Roxas parted with the radical element of the Nacionalista party in 1933 in agreeing to a U. S. proposal for independence after a 10-year preparation period. He stands for friendly trade relations with the U. S. and unlimited investment of American capital. Upon his election, he pledged to co-operate with both the U. S. and United Nations in developing foreign policy in the far east.

Throughout the bitter election, which pitted Roxas against the incumbent Sergio Osmena, the new president was charged with having collaborated with the Japanese during the occupation. He replied that he accepted membership in the puppet cabinet to further underground activities and served as adviser to the corn agency in 1943 to avert widespread starvation in the islands.

MAY DAY:
World Fete

The workers' holiday most of the world over, May Day was celebrated by huge throngs in Russia, Japan and Germany this year, with lesser manifestations in other countries.

Standing above Lenin's tomb in Red Square, Marshall Stalin reviewed Russia's armed might and watched a procession of workers hopped up with the vigorous order of the day: "Returning to peaceful work, we must constantly be alert, look after the armed forces and defenses of our country." Atomic scientists marched in the parade.

No less than 400,000 Japanese gathered in front of the Imperial palace in Tokyo, waving red banners, singing and listening to harangues on workers' rights. In Osaka, 50,000 Nipponese convened to demand minimum wages based on living costs, increased food rations, participation in management and creation of a Democratic People's front.

With Allied representatives looking down from a platform on the site of the shattered Protestant cathedral, 250,000 Berliners attuned their ears to spellbinders calling for solidarity in the class struggle of the working man and topped the celebration with the "Internationale."

On the farm . . .

The department of agriculture estimates 1945 milk production in the United States at 122.2 billion pounds, the highest total since 1942 when 119.2 billion pounds were produced. Milk cows on farms in the United States in 1945 averaged about 25.5 million, fully 400 thousand less than in 1944, the all-time high for cows of milking age achieved in this country.

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

Small Smokehouse

By W. J. DRYDEN, WNU Farm Editor.

By providing concrete or brick fire pit separate from the smokehouse the fire hazard is practically eliminated. Smoke from the fire pit passes from the rear of the fire chamber through an underground duct to the inlet in the center of the floor of the smokehouse. The meat to be smoked is supported on movable hangers placed on cross-beams. For successful operation, the walls and roof should be tight. The temperature can be controlled by vents in the gable ends. The house may be built of frame, plywood, stone, cement blocks or bricks. The type of material will be determined by local supply and price.

There are several reasons for smoking meat. The smoke dries the meat and the creosotes, deposited on the meat, act as a preservative. The smoke imparts a desirable flavor and tends to prevent molds from forming, and tends to prevent an oldish flavor from developing.

It takes about 30 hours of continuous smoking to finish the job for hams and a little less for bacons, loins and butts. The size of the smokehouse will be determined by the amount of meat to be smoked and the length of time that can be taken by the process. In most cases a small house as shown on this page will prove satisfactory.

The smokehouse should be constructed so as to give proper ventilation and carry off the warm air in order to prevent overheating. Sometimes it is necessary to kindle a paper fire in the smokehouse to start the draft so that smoke will be drawn through the flue.

It may be advisable to build the outside stove so that it can be utilized for other purposes. It might be needed for heating water for butchering or other farm operations. In such case an auxiliary smokepipe could be added and a damper provided to keep smoke from entering the house when not desired.

The hangers in the smokehouse should be so placed that no two pieces of meat would be allowed to touch. They should be hung below the ventilators, in order to allow a better circulation of smoke.

There is no farm building that costs so little and offers greater return on the investment than the smokehouse. During recent years, the demand for country smoked meats, poultry and turkeys, has increased to such an extent that a real "pin-money" business may be developed in almost any community, particularly with smoked poultry and turkeys.

As a fire measure, most farmers have found it advisable to construct the smokehouse with cement or fireproof bricks or building material. This does not increase costs materially.

SENATORS URGE RULE CHANGE

WASHINGTON.—Ten senators—Democrats and Republicans—got together secretly the other day to study that most sacred of all sacred cows—senate rules. Behind their meeting was the conviction that die-hard Dixie Democrats can block any measure they oppose via the filibuster, and that the majority must rule if democracy is to function in the U. S. A.

The secret meeting took place after senators received a flood of letters both for and against the attempt by Wayne Morse, Oregon Republican, to secure passage of the anti-poll tax bill through unanimous consent of the senate. Only senators on the floor at the time Morse attempted this strategy were Morse himself and Republican William Langer of North Dakota.

Liberal Democrat Warren Magnuson of Seattle, Wash., was presiding. Had he immediately asked senators if there was objection, there would have been none and the anti-poll tax bill would have passed. Morse had identified the bill only by number, so Magnuson did not at once recognize it. But, even if he had, probably he would have hesitated to pass a controversial bill without debate.

He was rescued from this dilemma by Senator Ernest MacFarland, Arizona Democrat, who quickly came to the floor and objected.

Since then, senate mail has been strong with letters both objecting to the Morse attempt as trickery and supporting Morse on the ground that this strategy was no more unfair than the filibuster.

Regardless of the above merits, a bipartisan group of ten senators has determined that senate rules must be changed. They seek to limit debate on any single bill to ten days, which would bring up the anti-poll tax bill, already passed by the house, before the senate recesses. They are thinking also of bringing up legislation to create a permanent FEPC—provided they succeed in winning their amendment to the senate rules.

The ten senators are: Democrats—Pepper (Fla.), Magnuson (Wash.), Guffey (Pa.), Glen Taylor (Idaho), Huffman (Ohio), Kilgore (W. Va.), and Mead (N. Y.); Republicans—Ferguson (Mich.), Knowland (Cal.) and Capper (Kan.).

FINAL PEARL HARBOR REPORT

Believe it or not, but the long-delayed reports on the Pearl Harbor investigation at last are being whipped into shape. They will not be published until around June, but here is the inside story on how the final verdict is shaping up.

The Democratic majority on the committee, led by Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, will absolve the two top military leaders in Washington—Gen. George Marshall and Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Harold R. Stark—of major responsibility. They will receive some minor rebukes, especially for poor co-ordination of army and navy intelligence; but nothing serious.

Democratic members of the committee also will absolve the state department of any blame and will let major blame rest where the original Roberts report contended it belonged—on the shoulders of army and navy commanders in the Hawaiian area—General Short and Admiral Kimmel.

Republican members of the committee will file a sharply worded minority report upholding Short and Kimmel and charging (1) that Short and Kimmel weren't sufficiently advised by Washington about intercepted Jap messages presaging the Pearl Harbor attack; and (2) that the two officers weren't provided with enough long-range patrol planes to spot the Jap fleet.

PATTON'S DIARY

The war's stormiest hero, Gen. George S. Patton, was the center of many a controversy before he died. But today the war department is still sitting on one of the hottest of Patton's hot potatoes—the general's secret diary.

Only a few people in the war department and the Patton family know it, but the famous general kept a careful diary all during the Normandy campaign, jotting down his frank comments about the Allies and even about his superior officers. Some of the comments just about burned up the page.

General Patton especially paid his compliments to the famous British field marshal, Montgomery, whom he criticized with almost the same bluntness as the soldier in the Sicilian hospital whom he slapped.

CHIPS FROM A GRANITE LIFE

Most people have forgotten, but it was Harlan Stone to whom the nation owes a debt for picking J. Edgar Hoover as head of the FBI. When Stone became attorney general, he swept out Burns and selected a young career man, Hoover, to take his place. No one had ever heard of Hoover before. . . . Stone was kicked upstairs from the justice department to the Supreme court by Coolidge when Stone dared move against Andrew Mellon's aluminum trust.

WEATHER:
Crop Factor

With another record-breaking harvest needed to help the U. S. meet both domestic and foreign demands, the American farmer looked skyward in many sections for the sign of rain that would bring nourishment to the fields. With warm weather permitting early planting in parts of the east, south and west, precipitation was needed to get crops off to an early start.

In the east, spring weather has been erratic, with temperatures ranging from the middle 70s to near freezing. Though rainfall is approximately six inches below normal, recent showers have broken some of the dryness.

A deficiency of rainfall in western Minnesota and North and South Dakota seriously menaced wheat and small grains in those areas and appreciable precipitation before July 1 will be required for good yields. While dryness has resulted in sparse stands in northwestern Kansas, wheat is in good condition in the rest of the state.

Heavy rainfalls throughout the Rocky mountain region have relieved immediate fears of drouth while growers in northern Colorado have been warned against insect and cutworm infestation due to early hatching of pests.

WAR CRIMINALS:
Look for Loophole

Brought to book by the Allies' international war crimes tribunal in Tokyo, former Premier Hideki Tojo immediately challenged his indictment on 55 counts on grounds that the Potsdam declaration did not provide for the charges set forth.

As Tojo's attorney, Ichiro Kiyose declared that the Potsdam agreement did not specify political activity as war criminality and speeches by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill had limited the meaning to war atrocities. Since the principle that militaristic political activity constituted war criminality originated at the Nuernberg trials, Kiyose argued, it could not be applied to terms of the Potsdam declaration under which Japan surrendered.

Named with Tojo were 27 other top prewar leaders charged with starting the war, conspiring for world domination and atrocities against prisoners and internees. In pushing the indictments, U. S. Prosecutor Keenan declared they were based on the principle that political leaders who plotted the execution of a war shared joint responsibility with the rank and file who carried on operations.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Complete Trial Needed To Legally Outlaw War

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

As the Nuernberg trials draw to a close, I continue to hear two questions repeated ad infinitum in the market places and bazaars, in the coffee houses and the couloirs (not to mention the lecture halls)

One is: Why on earth are they dragging out these trials; aren't they ever going to end?

The other is Do you think any of these fellows (the prisoners) are going to get off?

Associate Justice Jackson knows as well as anyone else that news from Nuernberg has long since departed inconspicuously from the front page. He knows, from reading the American newspapers which reach him not too belatedly, thanks to the ALS (the army's special courier service), that his role in the Nuernberg case will never bring him a succes de scandale. He knows his presence is needed in Washington on the Supreme court bench.

Why, then, does he tarry?

Full Documentation Is Required

By answering that question, one can answer the other two I mentioned at the beginning of these lines.

One: Why is this thing being dragged out forever. . ?

Answer: Because this trial is not merely a trial of a handful of international criminals. These evil villains are only a small part of the drama, even if it is they, and not what is behind their castigation, which sometimes still produces headlines. The trial is a great process of legal documentation.

It is the recording of history, for the first time in history, of history written in blood, and ink hardly yet dry. It must be a complete record; the record of a crime which, until it is so recorded, may never be admitted as a crime in the eyes of international statesmen and lawyers.

The Allied military tribunal (operation justice, as it was known in the army) was planned, and is being conducted to its long and apparently infinite end for the purpose of blueprinting a legal precedent for holding as punishable criminals, the heads of states who plot and carry out aggressive warfare.

That is the answer to question one.

Question two: Are they ever going to convict these fellows? I answered that in part when I said that the proceedings were far more than the trials of the defendants who sit daily in the prisoners' dock of the court house at Nuernberg, or in their lonely cells near by.

And for those who fear that justice will be cheated, let me say that most of those men, if it cannot be established that they took official part in the planning and execution of an aggressive war, are probably wanted on other charges in local courts. If they go free from Nuernberg, the local courts will try them, as the "Beast of Belsen" and others were tried and convicted for their separate and private crimes

It is possible, for instance, that the sadistic, degenerate Streicher, Jew-baiting wielder of a jeweled whip that was a symbol of his psychosis as well as an instrument of his perverse desire, will not be convicted by the IMT. He is so low that his fellow prisoners won't speak to him; so crooked that even when he was a Gauleiter, he couldn't be trusted to sign a single order of national or international significance. He finally stole so much from the Nazi party itself that he was incarcerated.

The Nuernberg trials will continue until the record is completed. Justice will not be cheated. And it is to be hoped that aggressive war, on the basis of the proceedings of this court, will become illegal. How can the United Nations hope to outlaw war unless they establish with sword, scales and woolsack that war is illegal?

TO SAVE FORESTS

Helicopters for Forest Fires?

MARCH FIELD, CALIF. — With March Field pilots flying the latest model army "egg-beaters," tests have been conducted in Angeles national forest with helicopters to determine their effectiveness in forest fire control. If tests are successful, the forest service may have its own fleet of rotary-wing aircraft.

The helicopters were used for experimental dropping of fire-suppressing materials from the air — a project in which skill approximating that of the wartime bombardier was turned to a peacetime purpose which might mean the saving of millions of dollars worth of national wealth.

The plan, if successful, will ultimately benefit woodsmen in Maine and Tennessee as well as in the Far West. The basic advantage of the helicopter, according to the experts here, is that it would enable the trained fire-fighter and his kit to get closer than ever to the key spot in one hop.

For several years the closest approach to this has been the "smokejumper," or parachuting fireman of the forest service. Trained at the regional base at Missoula, Mont., this sylvan paratrooper has served heroically and efficiently, but a chute does not steer like a helicopter.

David P. Godwin, assistant chief of the division of fire control of the United States forest service, flew out from Washington for the tests. He was met by regional officials of the service and by Lt. Col. Rollo Lawrence, in charge of the army air force search and rescue work centered at San Francisco.

Details on the "bombing" with fire-suppressants would not become available until summer, members of the party said. Like the helicopter experiment, it was approved in principle by the army last October.

March Field's own search and rescue unit, to which the helicopter pilots are attached, is headed by Maj. Fred W. Milam of Meron, Ind. Besides the rotary planes, the unit equipment includes two B-17s, five twin-engined advanced trainers and four Cub-type spotters. Their movements are guided by the rescue control center at North Hollywood.

America's annual loss through forest fires is staggering. Each year thousands of acres of natural forests are lost through fire, largely because fire-fighters cannot reach the blaze to put it out before it spreads over a large area.

Manhattan Heartbeat

Fifth Avenue, the teeming boulevard which runs the gauntlet from 1 south to 2340 north in the heart of the world's most important Treasure Island, is the Avenue FOR the Americas. In 1918, during the first World War, it was for a time called the Avenue of the Allies, which fooled nobody. With a past as glamorous as Camille's, a present as active as the dollar's, its future is as bright as radar's!

Come Sunday, the city fathers of the good old days shut the Avenue off so that Sabbath worshippers could have absolute quiet. Now it's almost necessary to rope off the glittering store windows so that the strollers can't have free rein! . . . The Avenue is an international hodgepodge of everything: Toy factories, two art museums (the Metropolitan and the Frick), famous cathedrals, churches and synagogues, the Empire State (the world's highest, widest and handsomest), architects and stock brokers, haberdashers, interior decorators, women's apparel specialists, Radio City (which gives natives their largest Christmas tree and an outdoor ice skating rink), a party favor house, swank restaurants, banks, and mansions filled with ghosts.

The first Fifth Avenue Hotel — six stories high (or can you stand it?) — was opened in 1859. It featured a novelty, New York's first vertical railway. What's that? Why, a passenger elevator—you dope. . . . Elevators along Fifth these days are such elegant affairs that operators are likely to look down their shafts at ordinary pilots of the Air Forces.

John Barrymore earned and lost several fortunes during his turbulent career. When a colleague chided him for his financial irresponsibility, Barrymore recited an epitaph he had seen in Westminster Abbey: "What I gave, I have. What I spent, I had. What I left, I lost—by not giving it."

Some of us wondered why Jed Harris, who once made a million dollars as a Broadway showman, didn't connect in Hollywood. . . . Insiders insist this is why. . . . Friends brought him to Louis B. Mayer, the movie magnate, who had been informed of Jed's genius on B'way.

"How much money do you want a week?" asked Mayer.

"How much do YOU get?" demanded Harris.

That did it!

When Heywood Broun first started reviewing Broadway shows he had the habit of making notes during dull shows to appear that he wasn't bored. . . . The worse the show the more he scribbled. . . . One night he stopped making memos during a second act . . . After the second interval the beaming producer said: "I feel better since I noticed you put away your pad."

"Yes," grumbled Broun, "I broke my pencil."

Sounds in the Dark: At the Singapore: "He reaches for the check like it was an atomic bomb!" . . . At the Stuyvesant Casino: "They say he's an awful bore — but I think he's rather expert at it." . . . At Ciro's: "When he dies the only guy who'll be sorry will be his insurance agent." . . . At the Park Central Lounge: "A layman is a pedestrian who jumped too late!" . . . At the Garden Restaurant: "He was just promoted from Account Executive to Office Boy." . . . At the China Doll: "Her love is so fickle it oughta be listed on the Stock Exchange." . . . At the Bronx Zoo: "But son, I've told you a hundred times, Senator Bilbo is in Washington!"

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle once related a bantering conversation he had with a $10-a-week actor who was cast in one of his plays. The young chap had laughingly suggested that the two agree to divide their incomes with each other for the rest of their lives. . . . Naturally, Sir Arthur had refused "such a ridiculous offer."

The $10-a-week youngster was Charlie Chaplin.

Harry Wagstaff Gribble, the producer, director, author and all around play expert, has coined a swelegant new word to replace the inaccurate "Colored" and equally untrue "Negro." . . . The casts of both "Anna Lucasta" troupes are thrilled about it.

It's a pip, to wit: Negramerican.

This one has been pinned on various hefty humans. But Alec Woollcott enjoyed pinning it on himself. . . . When Alec was tipping the scales (in the 300s) two actors noticed him wading in the Atlantic City surf. Said one: "Let's go swimming."

"How can we?" quipped the other. "Woollcott's using the ocean!"

FINDING A NEW SENSE OF VALUES

LESSON TEXT—Luke 12: 19, 20; 18: 24-30; 19: 1-10.

MEMORY SELECTION — The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.—Romans 14:17.

Money, riches, possessions—that's what men are living and striving for in our day. It is going to seem a bit strange, but it will be very salutary to stress once again the eternal truth, best summarized by our Lord Jesus when he said, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Luke 12:15).

I. Don't Depend on Riches (12:19, 20).

The rich man increased in selfishness as he increased in wealth. He began to feel secure because he had laid up much goods. Now he became proud and boastful. He thought he saw years of comfort and ease ahead. Evidently he had not read, or did not believe, the words of Scripture, "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" (Prov. 27:1; see also James 4:13-17).

Well, can a man depend on riches? The answer is no. They are here today and gone tomorrow. Man himself is here today and gone tomorrow. When he goes, he leaves all that he has unless he has invested it for God.

Money is like a broken reed. The man who leans on it will not only fall, but will pierce himself through with many sorrows (I Tim. 6:9, 10). Don't depend on riches—they will miserably fail you in your hour of need.

II. Beware of the Snare of Riches (18:24-27).

The rich young ruler had come running to Jesus to seek eternal life, but had turned away sorrowful when he found that a man cannot love money and love God at the same time.

Jesus improved the opportunity to point out that it is impossible for a rich man to be saved, except as the grace of God gets hold of him and sets him free from dependence on his wealth.

Apart from the grace of God, it is so easy for a rich man or woman to trust in riches, and to feel no need of God.

Look again at I Timothy 6:9, 10 and you will see that even the desire to be rich leads a man into a temptation and a snare. The man of God is warned to "flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness," and thus to be able to "fight the good fight of faith" (I Tim. 6:11, 12).

We repeat that all this has a strange sound to modern ears, so accustomed to the worldly philosophy of trust in things and in dollars. We need to warn our young men and women about the awful danger of loving money.

There is something infinitely better than riches, and that is what we find in our next point.

III. Seek True Riches in Christ (18: 28-30).

Peter and the other disciples had forsaken all the things of the world to follow Christ, and now as he reminds the Lord of that fact, he receives the assurance that there is a higher level of riches and reward for the loyal disciple.

God will never be in debt to anyone. There is no sacrifice made for his glory which does not find its glorious recompense, and no burden borne for his sake which does not bring its rich reward.

All this is not the result of some kind of a "deal" with God. We do not serve him because we expect a reward, but the assurance of the reward is there to encourage and spur us on in life and service for him.

The fact is, spiritual currency has far higher value than gold and silver of this world.

IV. Ask Christ to Deliver You From Riches (19:1-10).

Zacchaeus was a man well versed in the devious ways of the extortioner. He knew money, and how to make it. But he was not satisfied. He knew there was something more worth while than riches. His life was empty.

He sought Jesus. One look from the Master and he knew that he must lay his sinful heart open before him in confession. Salvation came to Zacchaeus that day.

Here, then, is the way to be delivered from the snare of riches—take Jesus Christ as your Saviour and Lord. He may then entrust riches to your care to use for him, but he will deliver you from a love for gold and from the folly of putting your trust in it.

The person who lives for riches is lost (v. 10), caught in a snare (I Tim. 6:9, 10), trusting in something that will fail him when most needed (Luke 12:19, 20), and trusting something which will keep him from God (Luke 18:24-27), unless there is grace to flee from it and turn to God

All vine crops may be planted after May 15, if soil and weather are satisfactory. Watermelons, squash, pumpkins and muskmelons take up too much space to grow in small gardens. A few hills of the bush type squash may be satisfactory to grow in moderate size gardens. A question in minds of many gardeners is whether cucumbers, watermelons, gourds and pumpkins may be planted next to each other. There is no danger in crossing between various types of vine crops. If a melon tastes like a cucumber, it is not because cucumbers were growing next to the melon patch. The flavor in many instances has to do with immaturity or disease.

Plant cucumber seed an inch deep. Most gardeners plant cucumbers in hills spaced two feet apart in the row. Dig a hole about 2 feet in diameter and 1 foot deep. Mix several forkfuls of compost or well-rotted manure in the bottom and plant about eight seeds per hill. Wait until the seedlings are 3 or 4 inches high, then thin out to three of four of the strongest plants. The best cucumbers are grown when the plants are given plenty of water. The soil should not be allowed to dry out at any time during the growing season.

Give cucumbers and other vine crops continuous protection against pests. The cucumber beetles, which seem to be waiting for the cucumbers and melon seedlings to come out of the ground, can destroy tender seedlings before the gardener becomes aware of them. Apply a dust to the seedlings as soon as they come through the ground. A satisfactory dust is one in which 1 part of calcium or lead arsenate is mixed with 15 parts of dusting gypsum. The plants and the soil around the plants should be kept covered at all times. DDT dust should not be used, because it tends to stunt vine crops.

In many cases vine crop wilting is caused by bacteria which get into the water tubes of the plant and multiply so that they cut off the flow of water between the roots and the leaves. This explains the wilting and drying up of the leaves tire plants. Cucumb more susceptible to wi than squash and mu Both the striped and sp cumber beetles are k carry, and spread the that cause the trouble. doubly important to vine crops dusted t cucumber beetles.

" Whew! Sure is getting warm these days, and warm weather means spoiled food for me. A guy can't expect to thrive on tainted fish, moldy bread and spoiled leftovers. With people all over the world to feed, folks should remember to buy in small quantities, to keep perishables in the icebox.

"And, if they don't watch food so it won't spoil, it'll all come to me. Spoiled food is'nt a good diet for me either."

A quiet wedding took place at the Bethel Lutheran Church in Omaha, Nebraska on Sunday afternoon, May 26, 1946, at 5:30 o'clock when Miss Wilma Swalve, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Swalve of Klemme, Iowa, became the bride of Erling Odegaard, the only son of Rev. and Mrs. Albert Odegaard of Anchorage, Alaska.

Rev. Everett W. Norling performed the double ring ceremony.

The couple was attended at the altar by Miss Alice Cutsor, a close friend of the bride, as bridesmaid, and Mr. Marvin Neissen, a close friend of the groom, acted as best man.

The bride wore a gray suit with matching accessories and her corsage was of white carnations. The brides maid also wore a gray suit, with blue accessories and her corsage was of pink carnations. The bride's mother wore a light blue dress with black accessories and a corsage of red roses.

Following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served at the Legionaire Club to fourteen guests. After the luncheon open house was held at the Odegaard home.

The out-of-town guests were the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Swalve of Klemme; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Neissen, of Grundy Center, Iowa, and Mr. Paul Hartnek of Boys Town, Nebraska.

The couple will reside at 208 North 30th St., Omaha, until the latter part of August, when they will move to Iowa City where Mr. Odegaard will attend the University of Iowa.

The happy couple is spending their honeymoon visiting with the bride's parents and her brother, Raymond, who has just returned from the service and also with the Tom Neissen's at Grundy Center.

Polls Open Election Day On Standard Time

The polls will open in Iowa primary election day on standard time regardless of the clock readings in communities which have adopted "Daylight Savings time." This is according to a ruling given by Attorney General Rankin's office to Secretary of State Wayne Ropes. The hour for opening the polls is 8:00 A. M. throughout the state except in those communities which requre registration, where the hour is 7:00 A. M. The announcement of Secretary Ropes, whose office has general supervision of state elections, makes a uniform rule for opening the polls in full accordance with the law.

Retail Sales Higher In Iowa Report Shows

Retail sales reportd by 630 Iowa stores were 23 percent higher in February, 1946, than in February, 1945, according to the recent MONTHLY RETAIL TRADE REPORT, issued by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Census. Eighteen department stores revealed a 24 percent increase in February, 1946, over February, 1945. Sales increased substantially in the durable goods trades. Furniture store sales went up 47 percent, and dealers in lumber building materials showed a 46 percent increase.

SALES MANAGEMENT puts Iowa's potential retail sales for 1946 at $1,615.000,000. although ranking 20th in population, Iowa ranks 14th in potential retail sales.

LARGE CROWD AT BUREAU DINNER

Members Of Two Counties Meet At Kanawha

The 100000 dinner given by the Iowa Farm Bureau federation to counties exceeding their 1946 membership quota was attended by 130 people from Wright and Hancock Counties. The dinner was staged at Kanawha Tuesday evening May 21. The ladies were guests of the Hancock County Farm Bureau because Hancock County lost membership contest to Wright County. Emery Dull and Adrian Gamble, district organization, were in charge of the meeting discussing the important topic of maintaining the membership in the counties and state. They pointed out the vital roll a strong Farm Bureau organization can play in the future policies affecting agriculture and the nation. Mrs. Carl Swanson of Britt entertained the group during the dinner with accordion solos.

The present membership in Wright County was reported to be 1150 and in Hancock County it is 1339.

Because bush lima beans are the most sensitive of all beans, their planting should be delayed until soil and weather are warm. That normally means close to the first of June. Dusting the seed with a protectant and disinfectant dust before planting usually will insure good stands of seedlings. Henderson Bush lima is a dependable variety for Iowa. Iowa State College horticulturists recommend planting the seeds about 6 inches apart. While pole lima beans are not well adapted for Iowa conditions, pole snap beans commonly yield much more than the bush beans.

It is not too late to set out cabbage and broccoli plants. If transplants have been injured or killed, new plants may be set out. And the next few weeks are a good time to be setting out tomatoes, peppers and eggplants. It's a good practice in setting out plants to water with a "starter solution." Any of the complete chemical garden fertilizers may be used. Dissolve about 3 tablespoonfuls in a gallon of water, stir well and allow the solution to stand several hours before using. Water each plant with a cupful of the solution at time of setting.

Keep an eye open for the first squash bugs. Pick and kill them before they have much opportunity to lay eggs. Place boards near the squash plants and turn the boards over early in the morning. Kill the bugs you find there. When the young nymphs are seen, apply spray to their bodies. Use 1 tablespoonful of nicotine sulfate in 1 tablespoonful of nicotine sulfate in 1 gallon of soapy water. This will not kill the adults, however.

NO HARDSHIPS IN HELPING HUNGRY

Ask Iowans To Share Food, Build For Peace

Iowans will not go hungry in doing their share towards feeding starving Europe and Asia, and neither is all the food exported to famine areas being given away. A. J. Loveland, head of the Production and Marketing Administration in Iowa, has issued this statement to correct misleading rumors which have found their way to his office.

The Production and Marketing group has been charged by the United States Department of Agriculture with carrying out the famine emergency program in Iowa.

All we have been asked to do in this program, said Loveland, is:

To cut down on overeating.
To make shifts to release more of certain critical foods badly needed for export.

The amount of food we usually throw into our garbage cans is enough to keep millions of starving people alive. We can't expect to set an all-time record in eating and wasting food while 500 million persons are starving, and at the same time build a lasting peace, maintains the state PMA director.

Priority for Wheat

Wheat and wheat products have been top priority in the list of foods needed in famine areas overseas.

That is the reason the famine emergency committee is asking for a nationwide drive to cut down on use of wheat in all forms. Specifically, Iowans are asked to reduce their daily diet by two slices of bread or the equivalent in other wheat products.

"Now as to giving our food away, that needs a little clearing up too," said Loveland.

Buying Food

Four-fifths of our food exports are going to countries which are paying for them and to occupied areas under the American flag. These include such as France, Belgium, Holland, England and a few Latin countries.

"The famine emergency may last longer than was expected at first," Loveland continued "so we should learn to make adjustments to plentiful foods such as potatoes, cut down on waste and in some cases, simply eat less."

New Auto License Plates Arrive In County

The 1947 automobile and commercial plates have been received by the County Treasurer. There will be two plates each for automobiles and trucks. The farm trailer plates are also on hand.

The color of the 1947 plates are black on white. They will go on sale December 1st, 1946.

We have received 4900 auto plates so there must be some prospect of a lot of new cars being registered for next year.

Four Inches Of Rain Fell Here Thursday Night

This community had up to four inches of rain in a few hours last Thursday night, which sent the Iowa river out of its banks and flooded lowlands.

The heaviest rain fell northwest of Klemme and the West Branch flooded agricultural lands and in some places was over the highways.

Colder Winters Ahead

Cooler weather with old-fashioned winters like grandpop used to know are returning, the United States Weather bureau says: Weather trends come in 50-year cycles, it explains, and for the past half century we have been moving away from the winters in which folks had to dig through the snowdrifts to locate clothespoles.

Now will come a slow move back to the days when grandpop often walked into the second story of the old farm right from the snow level.

"And a good thing it will be to toughen up the citizenry," declared Elmer Twitchell today. "We've been getting soft in sissy-like winters when the folks thought a blizzard was any snowfall that kept a limousine down to 40 miles an hour in open country. 'Blizzard Sweeps City' has been the routine headline every time a snowdrift got halfway up a milk bottle on the windward porch.

"What's become of the old fashioned fellow who had three fingers missing from the deep freezes? Where's the native once common to every community who got around on a wooden leg most of his life because of exposure in an icepack in his own back yard? Where are the countless folks who went around all their lives with tender ears and noses because of frostbite in their early days?

"When I was a boy," he continued, "you had to face the house southward or you'd get four or five loads of snow in the bedroom right through a door crack. It was nothing to have a fire freeze up over night. Once every winter they had to get a snowplow to dig me out of bed . . . and I slept in the attic!

"Big cities get out super-plows to fight a snowstorm that old-timers would tackle with a whiskbroom, and without bothering to put on anything but a pair of pants and an open shirt.

"Let the old-fashioned winters come back for the good of the race!" he concluded. "There will be less squawkin' about minor inconveniences."

The Hobos of America have voted to hold their 1947 convention in Miami, because the cities usually chosen are too cold in the spring. In this announcement you have a reflection of the American mood these days. A bum used to be willing to take his fun where he could find it, and always convenience of locale and economic considerations counted most. But now the climate must be right regardless of traveling distance and general expenses. The modern hobo refuses to loaf except near the Gulf Stream and he prefers to get there by plane.

Vermont Sugar House

Vermont is pre-eminently a dairy state, with beef, milk, butter and cheese as important products. It is also well suited to diversified farm- ing and fruit growing. Many sheep are raised there, and it was in Ver- mont that the Morgan horse was developed. Both in quality and quantity Vermont leads all maple- producing states with a normal yield of about 40 per cent of the total. The 35,000 bearing apple trees in the state's orchards yield a product of notable quality.

In industry Vermont is noted for lumber and lumber products, wool- en mills, paper-making, marble, granite, slate, lime, asbestos, talc, soapstone, kaolin, ocher and other products. Steel squares were in- vented in Vermont and are still manufactured at St. Johnsbury.

In recent years a growing num- ber of writers and artists have made Vermont their permanent homes. Others spend a part of the year there. Dorothy Canfield Fish- er, who loves her Arlington home, is one of the state's authors. Robert Frost, the poet lives in Shaftsbury.

Chester A. Arthur was the first native Vermonter to become Presi- dent of the United States, later fol- lowed to the White House by Calvin Coolidge of Plymouth. Adm. George Dewey, Levi P. Morton, John Deere, John B. Mansfield, Stephen A. Douglas, John C. Saxe, Joseph Smith, Alphonso Taft, Brigham Young and many other figures in history were born in Vermont.

In Poultney, when a lad, Horace Greeley set type in a small print shop. Salmon P. Chase lived and studied law at Randolph. Peacham was the boyhood home of Thaddeus Stevens. Eugene Field, with rec- ollections of his boyhood in New- fane, based several of his poems on local life in Vermont. Few states have produced so many notables in all lines of endeavor as hardy, mountainous Vermont.

Samuel Champlain, French ex- plorer, was the first white man known to have seen any part of Vermont. When coming from Can- ada, in 1609, he went up the long lake that bears his name. The first settlement in Vermont, though short- lived, was also by the French, when Captain La Motte built a fort and a shrine on Isle La Motte. In 1690, Capt. Jacobus de Warm established an outpost on what is now Chimney Point. In general, however, Ver- mont was a no-man's land in the 17th and 18th centuries, a mere passageway for French and Indian raiding parties seeking the English farther south and east.

From the earliest days, Vermont gave attention to primary education. The University of Vermont was chartered in 1791. Other institutions for higher education include Nor- wich university, Northfield, the sec- ond oldest military college in the nation; Bennington college; Middle- bury college; St. Michael's, Win- sooki; Trinity, Burlington. There are three normal schools and two junior colleges in the state.

One of the crowning features of Vermont is the province of the Green mountains. Here are found the highest peaks—Killington, El- len, Lincoln, Camel's Hump, Mans- field and Jay. The physical geog- graphy of the state is diversified, however, with the Vermont lowland on the west and much rolling coun- try eastward. The state's geology is complex and extremely fascinat- ing.

Vermont is nicknamed 'The Green Mountain State." Its motto is "Freedom and Unity." The state flower is the red clover; state bird, hermit thrush; state song, "Hail, Vermont."

A convention of ers was held in the Cata- ern at Bennington in 1765 this controversy. Already ntain Boys, had come into being.

At a convention in Westminster in 1777, Vermont was declared an in- dependent state and the name of New Connecticut was adopted, but shortly afterward the name was changed to Vermont. Verd-Mont had been suggested several years earlier. The Green Mountain Boys took part in all the conflicts of the Revolution, and Bennington monu- ment, 302 feet high, commemorates the battle of Bennington.

From 1777 to 1791 Vermont was a completely independent republic. When all the ancient disputes were settled, the state adopted the con- stitution of the United States and was admitted as the 14th state—the first to be added to the original 13. The capital was established in Montpelier in 1805.

Men of Vermont have a noble heritage, a love of liberty and in- dependence that is deep-rooted, and full appreciation of human rights.

FRIENDS AT BETHANY

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:3-9; Luke 10: 38-42; John 11:1-3.

MEMORY SELECTION—Let us love one another: for love is of God.—I John 4:7.

Friendship comes to those who are friendly. That response of heart to heart, which opens up the deep wells of mutual devotion, is one of life's richest experiences.

There is too little true friendship in the world because men and wom- en have not learned of the Lord Jesus what it means to be a real friend.

There are mutual privileges and correspondingly mutual responsibili- ties in friendship. There are sor- rows to share as well as joys, and there are times when there must be the outpouring of sacrificial de- votion.

"There's not a friend like the low- ly Jesus, no, not one!" is not just the sentiment of a hymn writer. There is no friend like the Lord. He, therefore, merits our fullest de- votion.

There are three incidents in our lesson, all of which took place in Bethany, the little village near Jeru- salem where our Lord had found real friends. He went there to rest, to pray, and to find companionship. These incidents reveal that

I. Love Gives All in Sacrificial Devotion (Mark 14:3-9).

A rather shocking thing took place in the home of Simon. Jesus, his distinguished guest, was at din- ner with the disciples, when a woman walked in unannounced and anointed his head with costly spike- nard ointment. The disciples were surprised, and led by the betrayer, Judas, who had his hands on and in the money bags, they protested such awful waste.

Think of it—the value of this oint- ment was 300 pence, the equivalent (we are told) of 500 days of work. That means in our day it would be worth from three to five thousand dollars.

She should have stopped to think! Some lesser gift would have shown her love, and this rich gift could have been used for the poor!

Thus reasons the cool, calculat- ing church member; but the be- liever with his heart full of love for the Master, gives without stint.

The Lord honored her gift, and ac- cepted it as the anointing of his body for his coming death. He re- minded them that they would al- ways have the poor to care for, and he would soon be gone.

Love which never overflows in the abandonment of sacrifice for the one beloved is a cold and distant thing; in fact, one wonders if it really should be dignified by calling it love at all.

The Lord is looking for followers who are willing to give themselves freely and gladly for him, pour- ing out the lovely fragrance of a life fully yielded to him.

II. Love Shares the Fellowship of Joy (Luke 10:38-42).

The little home of Mary, Martha and Lazarus in Bethany was light- ed up by that intangible but delight- ful glow which comes with a friend who honors one's home by his or her presence.

He had often been in this home. Here he found relaxation and com- fort. Here he gave of himself in fel- lowship and blessing.

But there was a shadow over this visit. Martha, eager to have a good dinner, was "cumbered" in heart and soon became critical of Mary because she sat at Jesus' feet.

Do not assume that Mary had not done her share of the work. She had, but she "also sat at Jesus' feet." In other words, she knew when the time had come to quit fuss- ing and to get some real fellowship out of the joy of having Jesus in the home.

We who love and serve the Lord need to watch lest we become so "cumbered with much serving" that we lose out spiritually. We can be- come so busy with church work, holding offices in religious organiza- tions, yes, even with preaching and teaching, that we do not have time for personal fellowship with the Lord.

III. Love Bears the Burden of Sor- row (John 11:1-3).

The very home where joy was the portion one day, became the house of sickness, death and sorrow on another day. Life is like that—we may all expect that tragedy, sick- ness and trouble will come.

What then? Well, you will find that some of your professed friends will disappear. They are fair- weather companions. They have no taste for storms. Real friends will stand by, and what a treasure they prove to be!

But here again, the best friend of all is Jesus. When Lazarus was sick, "his sisters sent unto him." Send for Jesus in the hour of need! Oh, it is true that he did not come until Lazarus was dead, but he had a good reason for that, and in due time he came.

Crochet Lovely Heirloom Doily

HERE'S one of the most exqui- site crocheted doilies ever made—it's an heirloom piece lent me by a friend who collects lace. The Irish crocheted doily is 14 inches in diameter, has 19 "roses" around the edge and 16 "al- monds" radiate from the center rose. Makes an ideal centerpiece for a luncheon table — use plain white linen oblong place mats edged in a plain "picot" to com- plement the centerpiece.

Dear Citizen:

The Salvation Army is asking the American people to support its Post-War work at home and abroad by giving Six Million Dollars, to a national "Marching Forward" campaign. Iowa and Hancock County must assume its proportionate share of this amount.

The Salvation Army, as you know, has a record of service to the less fortunate and to the men and women of our own and our Allied armed forces in 2 world wars that constitutes an achievement that is distinctly great. I am sure all of us are honored to be of some service to such a worthy organiaztion at this time.

Your local worker will contact you in the immediate future. Won't you please be prepared to give your whole-hearted cooperation?

Sincerely yours,

Drastic Decline In North American Ducks

Based on the annual inventory of waterfowl conducted by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service, director Albert M. Day has issued a very pessimitic report. The continental population of migratory waterfowl is about 25 percent under that of a year ago.

"After analyzing the results of the January inventory, stated Day, "we are forced to conclude that the birds have not only suffered reverses on their breeding grounds but have been seriously depleted by excessive shooting."

A breakdown of inventory figures show that with but two exceptions all species are less numerous than in 1945. The exceptions are listed as the black duck, one of the less important species in the Mississippi the fly-way, and the blue-winged teal, one of the most important middle western waterfowl.

Conservation officers in Iowa report that the blue-winged teal are nesting in abundance in their favorite Iowa breeding areas and several reports indicate more than the normal number of eggs in the clutches under observation.

When chicks are 8 weeks old they should start getting whole grain along with mash.

Than the old Diamond 760 Motor Oil? Definitely yes!

It retains the outstanding performance features of Diamond 760 but is a greatly improved oil of a higher quality. It has a higher Viscosity Index, a greater chemical stability, and resistance to decomposition or breakdown. In addition, it contains bearing corrosion inhibitor, an oxidation inhibitor and a mild detergent— recently developed chemical compounds which give D-X additional performance.

Costly Coal Strike Crimps U.S.; Plan Further Feed Reductions To Conserve Grain for Food

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Ill-fed and ill-clad, people in Italy clamber atop army truck as it arrives at dump and seek to salvage scraps of food, discarded clothing, cigarette butts and even cardboard boxes. Men, women and children climb up even before G.I.'s can unload refuse.

COAL STRIKE:
Costly Walkout

Though John L. Lewis ordered his United Mine Workers back to the pits under a two-week truce to relieve the critically low supply of fuel, the 1946 coal strike promises to be long remembered as one of the most costly in history, with the necessity for curbing fuel consumption resulting in serious restricitions on public utilities, industry and transport.

Lewis acted as the widespread effects of the walkout on the nation's economy led Senator Eastland (Dem., Miss.) to rise to his feet in the upper chamber to tell his colleagues that as a result of limiting freight movements to essential commodities ". . . the shipment of embalming fluid has been embargoed and we can't bury the dead."

Most spectacular figure in the strike, of course, was the burly, beetle - browed Lewis, United Mine Worker chieftain, who held out for the operators' consideration of his proposal for a health and welfare fund. Holding fast in face of mounting public opposition and senatorial fury, Lewis received the backing of the American Federation of Labor, to which his UMW is affiliated.

John L.'s acceptance of a truce to discuss the No. 1 issue of a health and welfare fund came after dwindling fuel supplies had led the government to urge coal-burning utilities east of the Mississippi and in Iowa, Minnesota and Missouri to follow Chicago's example in reducing power consumption.

With industrial enterprises limited to 24 hours per week use of coal-burning power and stores and movies opened only several hours per day, Chicago, Ill., remained one of the hardest hit of all the municipalities. Reduction in passenger service and limiting of freight shipments to essential commodities, however, served to bring home the strike to all sections of the country.

CONGRESS:
Busy Solons

With the coal strike crippling the economy, U. S. senators moved to take up restrictive labor legislation in the face of public concern over the prolonged walkout even as they were engaged in heated debate over passage of the $3,750,000,000 loan to Great Britain.

Though Democratic Majority Leader Barkley sought to sidetrack consideration of labor measures while feeling over the coal strike flared at white heat, administration forces were compelled to surrender to congressional pressure for action. Ordinarily pro-labor, Senator Lucas (Dem., Ill.) led the fight for legislation which would give the President power to assure continued operation of essential industries in event of union disputes.

Passage of the $3,750,000,000 British loan was assured with the resounding defeat of amendments which would have limited the size of the advance, provided for expenditure of 90 per cent of the funds in the U. S., and extension of interest-free, unsecured loans to veterans. The solons also rejected the argument of Senator Johnson (Dem., Colo.) that since the bill contemplated the raising of money for the loan only the house, which directly represents the people through individual districts, had the constitutional power to originate such legislation.

Pressed by the labor and loan legislation, the senate voted for temporary extension of the draft until the decks are cleared for full consideration of the question.

GRAIN:
Seek Feed Cut

Following the increase in the price of corn, wheat, oats, barley and rye, government officials contemplated a reduction in the ceiling on heavy hogs and a cut in fall breeding as further steps in the conservation program designed to make more grain available for food.

While initiation of the new price program resulted in cancellation of the 30 cent per bushel bonus payment on corn, a similar premium, plus the higher price, was retained on wheat, which is most vitally needed for foreign relief. As a result of the price changes, corn was boosted 25 cents a bushel, wheat 15 cents, rye 10 cents, barley 9 cents and oats 5 cents.

With grain sales being made more profitable than livestock feeding, liquidation of hogs, cattle and poultry was expected to result in increased supplies in the immediate future but less meat later. Even with reduced livestock production growing out of the new price program and the other contemplated government measures, the total supply of meat, eggs and poultry will be above prewar levels, it was said.

Food Prospects

Though farm production remains high, heavy domestic demand and relief needs abroad will out-balance supply, the bureau of agricultural economics reported. Indicative of continued large output, farm income for 1946 is expected to approach last year's record of nearly 21 billion dollars.

The bureau provided this picture of the 1946 food situation:

- Livestock and meat production will continue close to the 1945 level but fall short of demand, with prices of animals pressing against ceilings.
- Dairy products will remain below demand throughout the year, with butter supplies short even during the flush season of milk production from May to August.
- Poultry and eggs will be in plentiful supply through most of the year, with scarcities developing in the last three months of 1946. Prices may be moderately lower.
- Fats and vegetable oils may not be in sufficient domestic supply because of large export requirements of lard, shortening and edible oils.

LEND-LEASE:
Make Returns

Over 10 Allied nations have returned approximately one-quarter billion dollars of lend-lease goods thus far and Turkey has become the first country to settle its lend-lease account in full, the foreign liquidation commission revealed.

Of the total returned by Belgium, Brazil, the British empire, China, Egypt, France, the Netherlands, Russia and Yugoslavia, $796,000 worth was reissued to foreign governments under the lend-lease program and $697,000 was sold as surplus.

The first country to settle its lend-lease obligations in full, Turkey agreed to pay the U. S. $4,500,000 within 30 days.

POLAND:

While many citizens of Poland resent the Russian occupation of their country, the Polish peasants are realizing a life-long ambition to own their own land under the Soviet domination, Dr. C. S. Anderson, professor of agricultural education at the Pennsylvania State college, says. Large estates, many of them 2,000 acres or more, were taken from the wealthy landlords and now are being divided among the peasants.

Corn Borer Hungry Pest

It cost the American farmer nearly $37,000,000 last year to feed the hungry mouths of the European corn borer, but because the estimates are considered conservative in view of the increased acreage and higher yields during the past few years, losses may be even higher.

Losses caused by the borer in 1944 were considered to be about $22,700,000

BASEBALL:
Fight Pasquels

At first laughed off by the powerful major league magnates, the Mexican baseball league finally has been taken seriously with the New York Yankees and Brooklyn Dodgers seeking permanent court injunctions against the Pasquel brothers" solicitations of topnotch American performers to play south of the border.

Both the Yankees and Dodgers have received temporary injunctions against the gay grandees' attempts to get U. S. stars to break their American contracts for lucrative Mexican league offers. Granting of permanent restraining orders against Pasquel's agents in this country would seriously crimp their efforts to lure U. S. talent southward.

In going after the Pasquels, Branch Rickey, president of the Dodgers, sadly proclaimed: ". . . I consider the Pasquel league a temporary nuisance rather than a permanent threat. It is economically unsound. However, this year it could cause irreparable damage to a pennant contender. . . ."

RAILROADS:
Want Higher Rates

Railroad spokesmen pressed for a 25 per cent freight rate increase to cover higher wages and operating costs in hearings before the Interstate Commerce commission in Washington, D. C., while shippers called for a thorough examination of the whole tariff structure before determination of permanent schedules.

Declaring wages have increased $1,300,000,000 since 1941 and the carriers will pay $500,000,000 more for supplies, materials and fuel, Dr. Julius H. Parmelee, railroad economist, averred that the operators will suffer a $345,000,000 deficit this year at present rates.

Meeting in Chicago, the National Industrial Traffic league, representing 300,000 shippers, cautioned that higher tariffs may be disastrous to individual industries or discriminatory against them. Asking the ICC to deny the carriers' petition for immediate raises, the organization declared any hearing should provide opportunity for a fair development and examination of facts to determine results.

Eats Meal From Dump

Seated in the house restaurant in Washington, D. C., Representative Norblad (Rep., Ore.) munched on canned meat and cranberry sauce and drank lemon juice which he said the navy had dumped as garbage in Astoria, Ore. While none of his colleagues or newsmen had the stomach to join him in his repast, Norblad said friends of his had also eaten the food without ill effects and some Astorians had done a brisk business selling some of the discarded fare to restaurants. On the spot, navy officials declared that the food had been thrown away after some personnel had contracted dysentery after eating it.

MURDER:
Town Agog

If traveling through Texarkana, Texas, one would have seen porch lights burning all night, twinkling bulbs hung out in back yards, watchdogs all over town, and the streets deserted. Further, one would have found residents ready to pull a deadly trigger with any false move.

All Texarkana was on the alert against the phantom killer who had slain two couples at night and killed one and wounded another of a pair. Four of the victims were young couples and the two others were elderly married people who had been fired upon through the window of their farm home. All were shot in the head.

While the authorities told Texarkanans to keep their guns at their side and shoot to kill if assaulted, the famed Texas rangers, state highway patrolmen, sheriff's deputies, city policemen and the FBI threw out a dragnet for the murderer. They were joined by thousands of amateur detectives in the search.

U. S. TREASURY:

With receipts for the first nine months of this year already $33,148,000,000 the treasury department estimates receipts for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, will exceed the budget estimate of $38,609,000,000, made in January. Because of income tax returns, receipts in March were the highest of any month during the current year.

At the same time estimated expenditures of $64,654,000,000 are now expected to be lower than the figure projected in January.

National Parks Ready For '46 Travel Rush

(By WNU Features)

America is hitting the vacation trail this spring and summer and the crowds in the national parks are expected to be the greatest in their history. Some of the parks are already open, and all of them will be operating at full schedule by June, says Newton B. Drury, director of the National Park Service.

Lodges and hotels which have been closed for three years are being reconditioned. New staffs are being recruited and trained for the summer season.

Few of the sightseeing busses used in the national parks were suitable for war use, so most of the fleets are still intact.

Yellowstone, Yosemite, Grand Canyon and Glacier national parks will have complete sightseeing services.

It is expected that enough manpower will be available to restore full service in the other parks of the system.

Some reconditioning work may take more than six months.

Staffs may not be as complete and skilled as they were before 1941, but the concessionaires stated their plans are being rushed and they have high hopes of giving good service by June.

More than $500,000 for reconditioning the cabins, lodges and cafeterias in Grand Canyon, Bryce and Zion national parks and at Cedar Breaks national monument is being spent by the Union Pacific railroad, which operates the facilities in these parks.

The renovation program also includes purchase of 22 new 29-passenger busses and a fleet of 9-passenger sedans for charter service.

The prewar five-day all-expense tours through all the parks and shorter tours in Zion, Bryce and Grand Canyon will be resumed.

Ranger crews maintained by the national park system during the war years for vital conservation work will have their ranks augmented to protect the parks' natural beauties and resources.

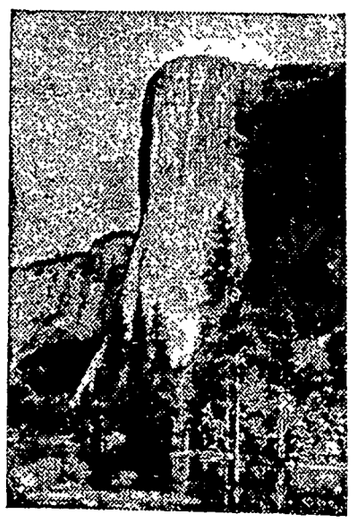
They'll also protect the crowds, who often take chances in the unfamiliar wilds.

An intensive road-building and road - improvement program is planned by the department of the interior, continuing through 1946 and 1947, to meet the influx of automobile tourists who will follow in the wake of new car production.

While the national parks are always free and open, the usual tourist facilities were suspended during the war. Park attendance dropped from a high of 21,050,426 visitors in 1941 to a new low of 6,908,749 in 1943.

That the 1946 total will surpass the attendance of 1941 is indicated by the rush of late fall and winter visitors which started immediately after V-J Day.

Shenandoah national park, in Virginia's Blue Ridge mountains, was virtually isolated during gas rationing, but on the Sunday following the surrender of Japan four cars a minute were checked in at the park.



HALF DOME . . . At Big Oak Flat entrance to Yosemite Valley.

Oregon Caves Are Opened

GRANTS PASS, ORE.—The Oregon caves recreational area near here, which were closed during the war years, will reopen late in May under the national park service. Harold B. Say has been appointed general manager of the resort.

The caverns were discovered in 1874 when Elijah Davidson, an early settler, shot at a bear. The wounded bear disappeared into a hole in the mountainside, and Davidson followed with a pitch torch to find a great underground world.

Before the war, increasing thousands each year were taking the 19-mile drive to the caves up through the timbered Siskiyou mountains from the Redwood highway.

The weird and beautiful underground chambers and the Swiss chalet lodge, in a canyon at the mouth of the caves, are expected to break all attendance records as the travel season opens for 1946.

Eastern Parks Offer Variety To The Tourist

The Shenandoah and Smoky mountains national parks offer an unsurpassed beauty treat to midwesterners whose previous vacations have shown them the wonders of the Rockies.

Great Smoky mountains national park embraces 460,000 acres, of which 200,000 are still covered by primeval forests. The peaks and ridges of the range, rising above 6,000 feet, and almost always veiled in mist, are the starting point of some 600 miles of trout streams.

The north entrance to the park is 30 miles southeast of Knoxville, Tenn., making it easily accessible by all types of transportation. Busses make two round trips from Knoxville through the park daily. There are two camp grounds in the park, and hotel and tourist camp facilities are available in nearby cities and towns and at Knoxville and Asheville.

Blue Ridge national parkway, a 485-mile strip of parkland connecting the Great Smoky mountains and Shenandoah national parks, will eventually have a modern highway running its entire length. U. S. route 11 provides an almost direct connection between the two parks at present.

A more scenic approach to Shenandoah from north of Roanoke, Va., is along the completed portion of the parkway, which connects with Skyline drive running the entire length of the park along the crest of the Blue Ridge.

The Skyline drive is 107 miles long, with parking areas, picnic grounds and a camping area along its length. Visitors may enjoy the magnificent scenery of the Shenandoah valley's fertile farmlands on the west and the rolling hills of Piedmont plateau on the east.

ANGEL LANDING . . . Zion national park, rises 1,425 feet above the floor of the canyon. There is a foot trail to the top.

Seven Rocky Mountain Parks Are Open

The vacation possibilities offered by Glacier, Grand Teton, Mesa Verde, Yellowstone, Wind cave, Rocky mountain and Bryce Canyon national parks are almost limitless. All of them are in the Rocky mountain-plains area and cover approximately four million acres.

They range from the historic wonders of Mesa Verde, with their story of an ages-old Indian civilization; the geysers and waterfalls of Yellowstone; the mountain trails and hidden lakes at Glacier; to the thrills of mountain climbing on Grand Teton's snowy peaks.

One of the most interesting of America's prehistoric sites and a major archeological preserve is Mesa Verde national park in southwestern Colorado.

Excavations on the mesa have revealed an amazing story of the pre-historic Indians

JOHN L. LEWIS STRATEGY

WASHINGTON. — John L. Lewis confided his strike strategy to a friend the other day as follows:

"Before you can get action, you've got to have a crisis. And in any crisis, someone's nerve has got to crack. I always bet that I can hold out longer than the government or the operators. My nerve won't crack first."

GOP CONGRESSMAN REWARDED

Few congressmen have enjoyed a higher rating at the White House in the last two decades than hard-hitting Richard J. Welch of California, a Republican congressman for 21 years.

Always subordinating party interest to the national welfare, Welch's rugged integrity won him the esteem of both Presidents Hoover and Roosevelt, with Harry Truman equally fond of him.

It is an axiom in congress that when Dick Welch wants something at the White House, he gets it. His last visit, to request Presidential support of another bridge connecting San Francisco and Oakland, was no exception.

Despite opposition from the navy, which contends that expanded aircraft and water-transport facilities in the bay area make a new bridge inadvisable, Welch told Truman that the bridge was imperative. Traffic on the present Oakland bridge, he said, was moving "bumper-to-bumper."

"All we are asking is a public hearing to state our case, Mr. President," said Welch, "but the navy is even opposed to that."

"This is an election year," commented Welch with a grin, "but there are no political considerations in the bridge project as far as I am concerned."

Truman may have been thinking of Welch's unflinching battle to support OPA as he replied:

"In your case, Dick, it wouldn't make any difference to me whether there were any political considerations in it or not."

CONGRESS RETREATS

It isn't often that the public rises up in protest so quickly and effectively as over the recent cutting of price control in the house of representatives, However, the "Save OPA" mail drive on congress now appears to have scored a bull's eye. Senate opposition to crippling house amendments is mounting and anti-price control senators one by one are beginning to yell "uncle!"

Despite this, OPA Boss Paul Porter and Economic Stabilizer Chester Bowles are awaiting the senate showdown with crossed fingers. What they fear is a compromise senate bill — a watered-down, but still dangerous, version of the house "repeal" measure.

Porter warned of this in a recent secret conference with Bowles and other top officials when the question was raised as to whether the outspoken Bowles should continue his cannonading for air-tight OPA legislation. Bowles himself felt that it might be smart for him to pull punches temporarily.

Porter, however, vigorously advised the contrary.

"This is no time to trim our sails or for you to let down, Chester," he told Bowles.

MISSOURI POUND CAKE

President Truman's first cousins, Nellie and Ethel Noland of Independence, Mo., are writing quite a few letters these days about the famous "pound cake" which long has been a favorite delicacy of the Truman and Noland families.

Last Christmas, while Truman was in Independence for the holidays, one of the Noland sisters' cakes was featured on the menu. A writer for the Associated Press, apparently inexperienced in the kitchen, obtained the recipe and published it. Later housewives throughout the country tried their hand at preparing the cake. But something was wrong. Scores of letters began pouring into the Noland mailbox at 216 North Delaware street. Housewives were having kitchen difficulties.

A check revealed the Associated Press reporter had failed to include in the recipe one pound of butter — necessary for good results in baking the cake.

Perhaps the AP reporter was patriotic and didn't think butter should be used in cake in view of the edible fats shortage. Anyway, President Truman's cousins have been writing letters ever since.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Eighty-five professors at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton school of finance and commerce were polled regarding the continuation of OPA. Eighty-one signed a petition urging continuation of price controls. . . . Telegrams were sent to clothing manufacturers recently by the civilian production administration asking a report on the men's suit shortage. Reply was that the government's goal of 28 million men's suits will be almost met. . . . If that helps any.

Hotbeds, also true of greenhouses frames, should be given a exposure, protected from winds by buildings or controlled, such a construction may not be financially practical, when a coldframe or hotbed will serve as well.

The main difference between hotbeds and coldframes is that the former are provided with some means of artificial heat such as fermenting manure, hot water, steam or electricity, while the only source of heat for the coldframe is that provided by the sun's shining through the glass cover. The details of construction of the frame and coverings on the two structures are essentially the same.

In building the greenhouse, the floor may be dirt, or concrete. The sidewall may be brick, tile, concrete, plywood or lumber. Shingles are sometimes used for sidewalls. Cost and availability will determine the type of material desirable. Steel or metal frames for glass are most satisfactory, although economy may dictate wooden frames.

The hotbeds and coldframes shown were designed by Michigan experiment station. The production of early vegetable plants in hotbeds, coldframes and greenhouses involves the use of good seed, the treatment of the seed and soil to prevent disease infection, the proper selection of soils for both the seedlings and transplants, and careful attention to the seeding, watering, ventilating, transplanting, hardening and other plant growing operations.

Huge Profits Found in Black Markets

Truman Urges South American Nations to Join Defense Plan; Loophole Caused Alcatraz Riot

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of (Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BLACK MARKETS:
Huge Profits

Indicative of the huge profits being made in the black market, the Chicago district collector of internal revenue disclosed that approximately four million dollars in delinquent income taxes have been paid by black marketeers since March 15 Payments of two illegal operators totaled one million dollars each.

Because the treasury is concerned with the collection of taxes that are due rather than in the legality of the source of income, black marketeers may escape prosecution if the revenue bureau has not opened investigation of their cases.

Meanwhile, reports from Washington, D C., indicated that the department of justice plans an all-out attack on the black market, with Att. Gen. Tom Clark holding that the best means of throttling illegal operators is by nailing them on tax evasions. At the same time, OPA has doubled its enforcement staff to 850 and is receiving FBI aid in assaulting the black market in meat.

PAN-AMERICA:
Defense Plan

In asking congress to authorize U. S. training, organization and equipment of South American countries, President Truman declared that such aid would enable them to participate in hemispheric security as envisaged in the charter of Chapultepec. As the strongest Pan-American nation, it is natural for the U. S. to assume defensive leadership, he said.

As precedent for close U. S. and Pan - American military relations, Mr. Truman pointed out that this country has collaborated with other hemispheric republics for several years within the framework of the good neighbor policy. Military and naval training missions have been sent south of the border and limited supplies were lend-leased during the war.

Implementation of the program would not result in an arms race or materially increase the level of armaments in South America since this country would not countenance uncontrolled distribution of munitions, the President said.

COAL STRIKE:
Congress Stirred

Congressional clamor for restrictive labor legislation mounted as the soft coal strike continued after the breakdown of initial efforts to bring the United Mine Workers and operators together and government seizure of the properties loomed.

Having consulted with the UMW's 250-man policy committee, John L. Lewis stuck by his demands that the negotiators first discuss a health and welfare fund before considering wage and safety issues. Reiteration of the UMW demands followed federal conciliator Paul W. Fuller's attempt to break the deadlock in the parleys and get the miners back into pits while a new contract was being drawn.

As the strike dragged on and dwindling fuel supplies slowly crimped industry, utilities and transportation, Senator Knowland (Rep., Calif.) demanded early consideration of labor disputes legislation if the deadlock was not resolved. Seeking to forestall restrictive measures, Senator Barkley (Dem., Ky.,) administration floor leader, cautioned against hasty action just because congress "is mad at somebody," meaning Lewis.

Lewis is tough labor leader.

ALCATRAZ:
Prison Flaw

Designed to house the nation's most incorrigible convicts, the prison cells at Alcatraz possessed one small—very small—loophole which permitted a scheming and wiry desperado to attempt the sensational jail-break that resulted in the death of 5 and wounding of 15.

Atop a tier of cells in Cell Block C runs a gun gallery for guards, with the horizontal bars enclosing it 5 inches apart but the cross-bars 18 inches apart. While in the cell block on prison duty, wiry, little Bernard Paul Coy, Louisville, Ky., bank robber, spied the spacing and figured that he could wriggle through if he could only bend the horizontal bars.

When released for cleaning duty in the cell block the first day of the break, Coy watched until the guard passed on his rounds and then clambered up to the gun gallery like a monkey. Equipped with a "spreader" devised from odd pieces of pipe, Coy managed to bend the horizontal bars enough to wriggle into the gallery, where he waited until Guard Bert Burch appeared. Slugging him with his "spreader," Coy then took his coat and keys and a 30.06 Springfield rifle, with 50 cartridges; a .45 caliber automatic pistol, with 21 cartridges, and several gas "billies." It was with these weapons that the desperadoes held out after being released from their cells with the captured keys.

ARABS:
United Front

Reacting quickly to an Anglo-American commission report that 100,000 Jews be admitted immediately into Palestine and allowed to reside there on even terms with the Arabs, the entire Arab world united into a single front to resist implementation of the recommendation.

Complicating the situation for the U. S. was Ibn Saud's alignment of Saudi Arabia into the Arab camp since long cultivation of this powerful monarch resulted in development of friendly relations between the two countries and U. S. acquisition of valuable petroleum concessions. By taking his stand beside the Arab league of the near east, embracing 33 million Arabs, Ibn Saud could wield potent influence in negotiations with the U. S. and British over Palestine.

Native Christians as well as Moslems joined in protest against the admission of 100,000 Jewish refugees into the Holy Land. In protests to King George VI of England, Pope Pius, Premier Stalin, Generalissimo Kai-shek and President Gouin of France, Arab Catholics declared that enforcement of the commission recommendations would result in crowding of Arabs from Palestine.

FRANCE:
To the Right

Though greatly strengthened by France's rejection of the proposed new constitution supported by the leftists, the rightist Popular Republican Movement (MRP) pledged to remain in the coalition government so that the country's representatives at the foreign ministers meeting in Paris would enjoy united backing in the diplomatic negotiations.

The popular vote on the constitutional issue came at a time when French delegates to the Paris conference pressed their claims to parts of the Italian border and demanded an arrangement for controlling the vital Ruhr and Rhineland to prevent the rebirth of German militarism and threat of future aggression.

As a result of the rejection of the proposed constitution, elections will have to be held June 2 for the selection of another constituent assembly to frame a new charter.

FOREIGN MINISTERS:
Work Hard

The Big Four's foreign ministers, meeting in Paris to speed up the formulation of peace treaties for enemy countries, worked feverishly on Italian and Balkan problems in an attempt to avert a deadlock which would further aggravate the economic disorganization of the continent.

Sen. Vandenberg (left) and Secretary Byrnes leave ministers' session.

While there were indications when the foreign ministers first met that the troublesome question of Trieste would be settled between Italy and Yugoslavia along racial lines, Molotov of Russia balked at the proposal. In seeking to have the strategic port and its surrounding area turned over to Soviet-sponsored Tito of Yugoslavia, Molotov offered to halve Russian reparation claims against Italy and relinquish demands for a trusteeship over Tripolitania in North Africa astride Britain's Mediterranean lifeline.

Quick to reject Molotov's offer, the U. S. and Britain asserted no Italian government could sign a peace treaty giving away predominantly Italian Trieste and Russia possessed no title to Tripolitania and could not consider the colony as its own for bartering.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Columnist's Thoughts Turn To Squirrels

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Summer was creeping toward the Potomac, the flag over the White House hung limp as a wilted petal, a hot sun, burning through the infrequent gaps in the heavy foliage, made yellow patches on the lawn. The fountain splashed faintly, falling like warm, futile tears.

I moved slowly along the drive, wondering if I could garner even a modicum of answers to meet emptiness left by the thousands of unanswered questions the world is asking.

I looked under the Japanese oaks whose tightly laced leaves, only a little above the ground, smother the young grass, hopefully starting up each spring, withering in the shadows before July. There, bored and half asleep, I could make out the form of the old gray squirrel.

Often this winter, he had come to my rescue when other "dependable sources" and "authoritative quarters" refused to yield up their secrets. But this time, he barely nodded, and looked away, deep in his meditations, probably a nuclear problem of some sort.

A few moments later, I was taking down notes at a not very newsful press and radio conference. The President, I feared, did not feel as cheerful as he looked. The handkerchief in his breast pocket was neatly folded in its customary three flat, razor-sharp triangles. (Sometimes his answers were almost as sharp.) The great red carnations on the table behind his desk, which holds the photographs of members of his family, were already drooping. The low hum of the mowing machine came in the open windows that look toward the Potomac.

Of what was said of import to the nation and the world, you will have read by the time these lines are printed. The rest was trivia.

We walked out of the executive offices. I glanced under the Japanese oaks, but my friend, the squirrel, had gone, the vista looked very bare and cheerless. So I went back and talked about it.

As soon as mail could reach me from Sturgeon Lake, Minn., I received a letter and a package. The writer said that as I had mentioned that it seemed impossible to raise grass on the shaded parts of the White House grounds, I might be terested in this sample of quack grass which she offered, and she wrote: "If it won't grow there, I'll be glad to know there is some place it won't grow."

The next day, I acknowledged the gift, and opined that quack grass must be another name for crabgrass which I remembered as the bane of my lawn-mowing experience. Soon I received other communications.

A landscape designer in Akron, Ohio, informed me that "quack grass is not crabgrass. The former is a perennial; the latter is an annual. Quack grass (agropyron repens) propagates by seeds and creeping rootstalks. Crabgrass reseeds itself each year."

Baukhage consults the old gray squirrel.

Another letter came from Robert L. ("Pop") Davis, "Amateur Mulch Gardener" of Thorsby, Ala. He referred to my mention of crabgrass as a pest, and then he went on:

"Having spent years at my hobby of looking for the most useful plant for growing summer mulch in my gardens, and deciding that crabgrass was it, I cannot resist a challenge. Even though millions of gardeners agree with your remarks, I still challenge them. At present, I have a spring garden growing without any hoeing on land covered with a thick layer of last year's dead crabgrass.

"Scarcely a weed can grow through it, not even this year's crabgrass.

"You see, I am 'Pop,' the laziest gardener in the world, and I refuse to gather, haul and spread mulch when crabgrass will do it for me, and do a better job of it. I make it mulch the land for me by leaving it strictly alone. I may even encourage it with fertilizer. After I have gathered my early spring vegetables, I let the crabgrass take over. In early fall, when the crabgrass stops growing here, I mow it down. I then have that mulch gardener's delight, a mellow mulchy spot where most anything can grow without using spade or hoe. I use a potato digger to dig planting holes."

But that is not all. "Pop" may be the laziest gardener in the world, but he is a vigorous poet. He enclosed a poem of which (alas) I have room only for one verse and refrain. Here it is;

"Bring me a hoe; pull 'em all up!
Chick weed, crabgrass, dig and cut!
Stoop down low! Nothing but trash,
Goosefoot, pigweed and Johnston grass;
Just no time to look at the sky,
Fleecy clouds a-floating by;
Work 'til you've such a crook in the back
That gardening pleasure's gone, alack!
"Wisdom may have a foolish sound;
Crabgrass mulch is good for the ground,
Let the weeds grow! Bring me a chair!
Crabgrass mulch is everywhere,
Soft and thick and brown."

Flame Cultivator Used to Hoe Weeds from Cotton

COVINGTON, TENN. — A revolutionary "flame cultivator" has been produced in TVA workshops and is being demonstrated by W. C. Harris, who is trying to grow 50 acres of cotton without the use of hand labor.

The flame cultivator, which uses butane fuel, is similar to the burner used by railroads to destroy weeds along the tracks. The farm model, however, is mounted on a tractor. Three feet or sleds ride on the ground to support the cultivator and keep the burners at the level desired.

Taking two rows at a time, four burners barely skim the ground, a burner on both sides of each row.

"The flame cultivator has been in use in the Mississippi delta for some time," Harold B. Jones reported. "Tests there have proved the cultivator will clean the weeds from an acre of cotton at a cost of four cents per acre.

"The flame cultivator has a capacity of 20 acres per day. The model shown is a two-row model and is the model which will accomplish this 20-acre per day cultivation."

"How do you keep from burning the cotton?" was the question asked by several observers.

"The flame cultivator is not used until the cotton is from 6 to 8 inches high and 3/16 of an inch in diameter. The cotton is tough enough then to withstand the heat for the short time it is exposed to it," answered Mr. Jones.

The demonstration in the Covington area is the first in the state of Tennessee.

Kidneys Must Work Well-

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

Farmers Strikes!

The Farmers of this community are very much disgusted with the conduct of John L. Lewis and his CIO Union.

For several months the unions have pulled one strike after another . . . Steel strikes, Automotive strikes, strikes in farm equipment factories, Coal strikes, etc.

All these strikes make things harder for the Farmers; bring up the cost of living, and induce inflation.

President Truman and Congress could straighten out this Tangle, but since the late Roosevelt "sold out" to the unions, our officials have become weak-kneed, and many of our Congressmen have become "yes" men for the Labor Unions.

The Unions have plenty of money and will try and "swing" the elections this year; they will try to elect more "yes" men for Congress.

At the coming elections is where the FARMERS CAN STRIKE . . Everybody vote . . Send the friends of the farmer back to Congress, and replace the Union "yes" men with others who have "guts enough" to stand up for what is right.

Scrape the toast. It's not burned that bad—you can still eat it. Heat the bread—it won't taste stale then. Strain the sediment out of those meat drippings, and the fat will be about as good as new.

"According to a nationwide survey, 100 pounds of edible food is wasted per year for each person in the home. And thousands in Europe and Asia are starving."

Many Visitors in Iowa State Parks This Year

Iowa's state parks are beginning to regain their pre-war popularity, according to the State Conservation Commission, and although, officials do not believe attendance in 1946 will reach the three and one-half million visitor record of 1941, activities in the state recreation areas are definitely at "boom" stage. General park use, according to park custodians, is at the present time running almost three times as heavy as in 1945, and the use by school picnic groups, always heavy in May and June, has more than tripled.

Reservations for overnight cabins is far greater then last year, with all overnight facilities at Backbone Park and Lake Wapello booked solid for the season. Group camp bookings are also heavy.

Concessionairs have hired lifeguards for all supervised state park beaches and concessions were in full operation Memorial Day and every day thereafter throughout the summer.

Seventy-four Million Pike Fry Are Hatched

Two wall-eyed pike hatcheries maintained by the State Conservation Commission at Spirit and Clear lakes, produced a total of 74,000,000 pike fry during the 1946 hatching season just concluded. This figure represents an increase of almost nine and one-half million over production in 1945. 19,380,000 fry were stocked from the Clear Lake hatchery and 56,850,00 from the Spirit Lake hatchery. Several million of the fry have been placed in state nursery ponds and will be stocked as fingerlings in the early fall The remainder have been stocked in the north Iowa pike lakes.

Will Vote On Natural Gas Franchise Thursday, June 6

SPECIAL ELECTION HERE THURSDAY THIS WEEK

Every Resident Urged To Vote On Important Issue Here

Klemme voters will go to the polls this week Thursday to vote on the natural gas franchise The voting place is at the Community Hall and the polls will be open from 8:00 a. m. until 8:00 p. m. in order to give everyone a chance to vote.

Klemme Can Have Gas

Town officials and business men of Klemme have looked into the matter very thoroughly and they are asking the voters of Klemme to vote "YES" on the ballot.

The Peoples Natural Gas Co., who are asking for the right to bring gas lines into Klemme, have been investigated by the Town Council and a committee of business men. They found the Company to be reliable, sincere, giving the best of service at low rates to the user.

No Cost To Taxpayers

The voter does not in any way obligate himself or the city when he votes "Yes." If you do not want to use gas, you do not have to do so no matter how you vote. The franchise is similar to that of the telephone and electric company. They offer you their service, but you don't have to have a telephone or electric service if you don't want it. The same is true with gas

None of these services cost the taxpayer anything.

By voting "yes" on the gas franchise you will be helping to bring more tax money into the town, as the Company will pay taxes on their equipment, the same as does the telephone company, the electric company, the railroad, oil companies and others doing business in Klemme.

There is no reason why anyone in Klemme should vote against the gas franchise. Even if you personally are not interested and do not intend to use gas, vote "yes" anyway and help your neighbor and your town to get this modern convenience.

A Few Questions Answered

Do I have to buy my gas equipment, such as heaters, hot water heaters, ranges, etc. from the Peoples Natural Gas Company?

Answer: No! You can buy from your local dealer. The Company is not interested in the sale of gas appliances.

Will the Company damage my lawn in laying pipes?

Answer: The pipes are laid in the ground quit shallow. Where it is necessary to cross a part of your lawn, the sod is carefully removed, the pipes laid and the sod replaced.

How about gas rates?

The rates are controlled by the Town Council and will be as low, or lower than in other neighboring towns.

When Can I Expect Service?

Answer: Due to present conditions the Company cannot promise when service will begin as they are at present unable to procure gas mains and equipment which they require. However, if Klemme votes favorably the Company will do everything possible to give service at the earliest possible moment. It is not likely that material can be procured to lay the pipes this year.

Of What Use Is Natural Gas?

Answer: It is economical for cooking, heating hot water, for refrigeration and for heating your home. It is safe, clean, and low in cost compared with other fuels.

Go to the polls Thursday of this week and vote "Yes."

You have everything to win and nothing to lose.

Attended Wedding

Crops Looking Up Despite Cold Weather

Despite the cool weather of the past week, the corn is growing and now is high enough to be cultivated. The stand looks to be fairly good, but a lot of sunshine and warm weather is needed to send it up to a normal growth.

Small grains and hayland are looking fine and thrived on the cool weather.

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

Two-Story Farm House

By W. J. Dryden, WNU Farm Editor.

The requirement of a satisfactory farm house is sufficient size, reasonable cost and proper construction. The type of material used should depend upon the local supply. There is a vast cost difference in certain types of lumber and building material in different parts of the country.

The plan presented in this article is of a house that will prove suitable in most sections of the country. With the help of a building supply dealer or lumber yard or contractor, it will be easy to change the plans to suit individual needs. Rooms may be added, enlarged or other alterations made as desired.

Adequate, well used space for both the family and the furniture is a large factor in farm house comfort. Not only because quality material and workmanship is a financial sound requirement for farm homes, but because it is a safety first requirement, considerable attention should be paid to these factors.

If the farm is without electricity, the house should be wired in order that electricity can be installed at a later date without "tearing up" the home. Plumbing should also be installed with running water facilities, even though the running water may not be available when the house is first built.

Costs for ordinary cellars have been reported varying from 50 cents to $1.00 per square foot of floor space. This may be reduced if most of the work can be done by the owner. Easy excavation and low-cost materials also make for low unit cost.

The cost per square foot of floor area of a two-story frame house is usually from 5 to 15 per cent less than that of a one-story house in the same locality. Building costs will vary considerable in different sections of the country.

While the trend in recent years seems to have been toward the one-story home, the two-story house meets with favor with many farmers. These plans are given as a guide. Every home builder should incorporate his own idea in order to make the farm home representative of the family.

Washington The EVERGREEN STATE

By EDWARD EMERINE
WNU Features.

THE Oregon country, including the most northwesterly portion of all, the present state of Washington, was the unwanted and all-but-forgotten land of a little more than a century ago.

Back East they felt that the Rocky mountains were the natural western boundary of the United States and refused to vote one cent for the development of a region so far away. There had been two wars with the British; why chance a third? Let the British have it. The United States had all the land it needed.

But those thousands of pioneers who had urged their oxen along the Oregon trail and crawled over the mountains thought differently. They had found a good land, rich in beauty and vitality, where the mountains and forests came down to meet the Pacific ocean. The British wanted the country merely for trade with the Indians. The pioneers wanted it for their homes, their farms, their ranches, their dream cities. And they wanted it to be a part of the United States.

They had traveled hundreds of weary miles, fighting Indians along the way, burying loved ones in unmarked graves. And now they had cleared their land, built houses, planted crops, and knew they had found an area with resources so vast and varied that even they were bewildered by the prospects. Somehow the East and Washington, D. C., must be told about it, made to believe.

Washington finally heard, and the cry of "Fifty-four Forty or Fight" went up. The settlers cleaned their rifles and waited. If the British wanted war, they were ready. But war was averted by the treaty of 1846, in which joint American and British occupancy was ended. A compromise boundary of the 49th parallel was established, and the Oregon country became a part of the United States.

The Columbia river, however, remained a natural dividing line running through Oregon territory. The settlers "north of the river" wanted a territory of their own. As early as 1845 they had carved the area into two enormous counties, Lewis and Clark. More settlers were crossing over and sentiment for a division was evident. A group met at Cowlitz Prairie to memoralize congress. They were not heard. They met again in 1852 at Monticello and sent another petition to Washington.

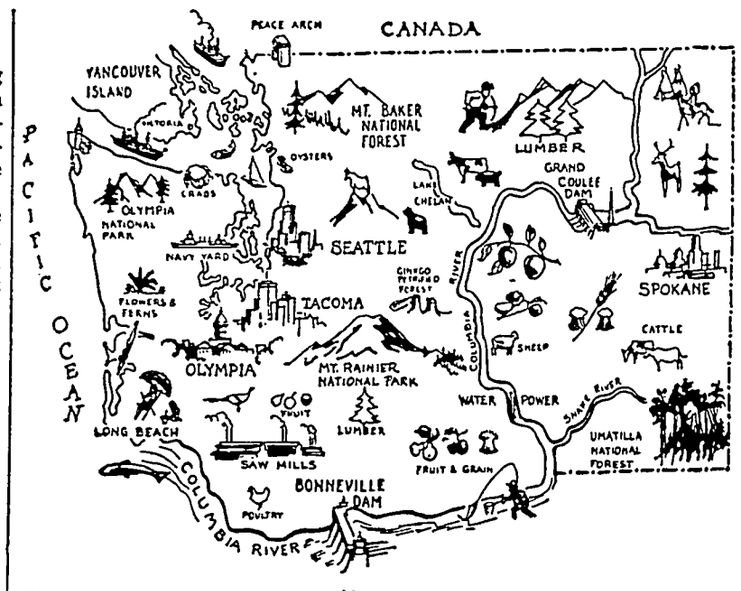
Joseph Lane, Oregon territorial delegate, offered his aid and introduced a bill to organize the territory of Columbia, for that was to be its name. The bill was passed, but not before it was amended to change the name to Washington territory. On March 2, 1853, just two days before he left the White House, Pres. Millard Fillmore signed it.

Washington territory extended from the continental divide to the Pacific ocean, including what is now the northern part, or panhandle, of Idaho. But the settlers were not yet satisfied. Agitation for statehood began and continued for nearly 15 years. In 1889 they were successful and Pres. Grover Cleveland signed the bill—a month before he left the White House. At a convention in Olympia on July 4, that year, a constitution was drawn up, and at an election on October 1 it was adopted by the citizens. A new man in the White House, Pres. Benjamin Harrison, issued a proclamation on November 11 that Washington was admitted as a state.

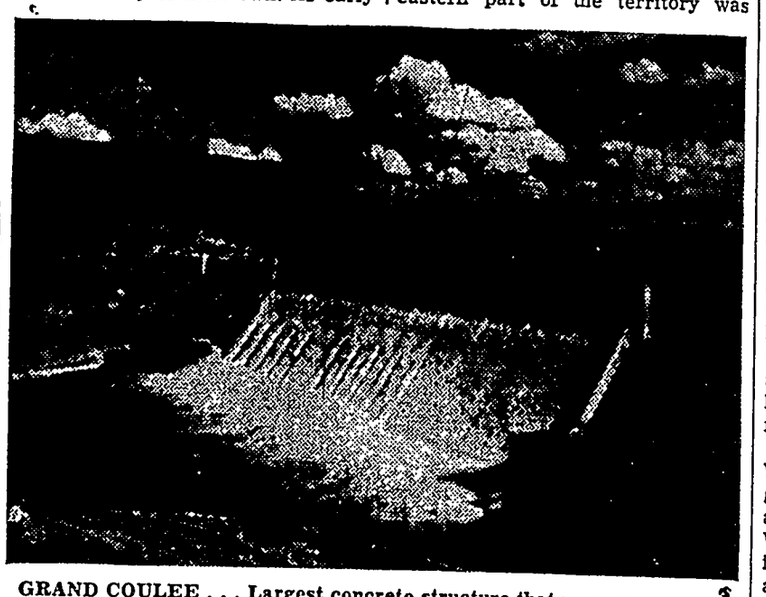
When the Indian wars ended, the eastern part of the territory was opened to settlement and brought immediate prosperity throughout the Northwest. The arrival of the "Mercer Girls," widows and orphans of the Civil war, provided wives for the territory's excess male population. Railroads raced to reach the great empire, with new towns and settlements following the ribbons of steel. There was a severe set-back, however, when the new state was hard hit by depression and panic in 1893.

Washington's recovery was rapid, for its people were virile and determined. The Alaska gold rush of 1897 made Seattle the metropolis of the Northwest, and a few years later, in 1903, there was a mining boom at Spokane which tripled that city's population. Ports and shipping grew rapidly on the coast. Fishing became an important industry. Agriculture flourished and livestock increased all over the state. Lumber business and mining brought prosperity to thousands.

The Evergreen state (or Chinook state) holds more than the majestic mountains, canyons, gorges, forests, lakes and highways shown in a tourist folder. It is more than scenery. It is a land of vast natural resources, many of them as yet undeveloped or not fully utilized.



MON C. WALLGREN
Governor of Washington
Born in Des Moines, Iowa. Home town, Everett, Wash. Former state, representative and United States senator.



GRAND COULEE . . . Largest concrete structure that man ever made. Power from this dam accounted for the major portion of aluminum for construction of our airplanes for the Army Air Forces during World War II.

Washington is rich in minerals — coal, gold, silver, lead, mercury and zinc. It has clays, granite, sandstone, marble, limestone and cement. Also found in the state are antimony, arsenic, tungsten and platinum.

Standing timber in Washington includes Douglas fir, yellow and white pine, spruce, larch, cedar and others. Normally, Washington leads all states in lumber output, shipping its products all over the world. It has wood pulp and paper mills as well as other industries built on wood products.

On Washington's coast are innumerable harbors on which Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Olympia, Vancouver and other important cities are located. This great commercial area is the nearest American gateway to the ports of Asia and handles most of the shipping to and from Alaska as well as world trade through the Panama canal. During World War II the shipbuilding and airplane manufacturing industry reached gigantic proportions and is expected to continue.

Coupled with its almost-unlimited natural resources is Washington's mighty output of hydro - electric power for industry. The Grand Coulee dam is part of a reclamation project that will ultimately irrigate 1,200,000 acres of land and produce electrical power far in excess of present needs. The Bonneville dam and others also contribute to the generation of power.

Washington, however, remains chiefly agricultural. It leads all states by far in the production of apples and is high in output of other fruits such as pears, peaches, cherries, grapes, apricots, prunes and berries. Other crops are wheat, barley, oats, corn, alfalfa and clover hay, sugar beets, peas and hops. Huge herds of cattle and sheep graze throughout the state, and horses, hogs, chickens and turkeys are grown profitably on most farms and ranches.

In the eastern part of the state, Washington is semi-arid, with irrigation used extensively. Its grain and cattle industries thrive there. West of the Cascades the rainfall is extremely heavy, ranging as high as 80 inches annually, with a resultant profusion of vegetation.

The people of Washington have a rich heritage of thrift and courage and they retain the pioneer spirit that led them through the perils of settlement. They have the vision, too, for greater strides tomorrow.

HOUSING:
Get Going

Welcoming final passage of the veterans' housing measure designed to push construction of 2,700,000 new homes by 1947, Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt cheerfully exclaimed: "The . . . program now can be thrown into full gear."

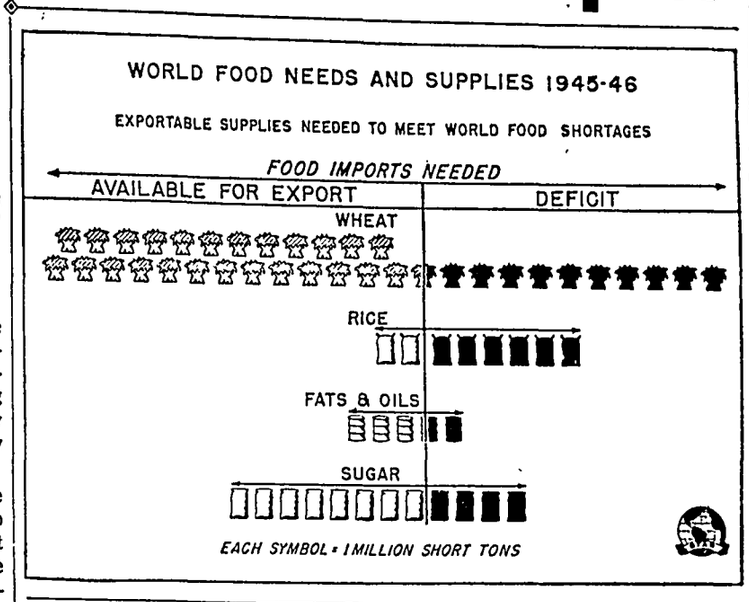
Worked out by house and senate conferees, who labored to draw up a common bill from two different pieces of legislation, the measure represented a victory for the administration forces in that it provides subsidies of 400 million dollars to increase the production of building materials. Earlier opposed by the house, the subsidies later were approved on the strength of administration arguments that such payments would boost the flow of construction supplies without increasing the cost of new homes.

In addition to the subsidy provision, the new housing bill authorizes the government to increase home mortgage lending by one billion dollars; extends priorities and allocation power to channel materials into low-cost and medium-priced residences to December 31, 1947; establishes preference for vets in purchasing or renting new structures; gives the housing expediter broad authority to order changes in material pricing regulations, and empowers him to limit the export of lumber as long as scarcities exist in this country.

DRAFT:
O. K. Extension

Allowed only hours in which to act to prevent the extinction of the selective service act, the senate accepted stiff house amendments to the draft calling for cessation of inductions of fathers and teenagers.

Passage of the measure extending selective service until July 1 resulted from rapid-fire congressional action in the midst of senate deliberations over approval of the multi-billion dollar British loan and restrictive labor legislation. With the senate pausing in its discussion of these issues to o.k. existing draft legislation until July 1 to beat the expiration deadline, the house took advantage of the time element to dilute the draft and force its remittance to the upper chamber for reconsideration.



DIPLOMACY:
On Dollar Basis

Having used its great material resources to balance the scales for allied military victory over the axis, the U. S now is acting to employ its tremendous wealth for the stabilization of political conditions abroad to promote free exchange between nations.

Popularly known as "dollar diplomacy," the administration's first open application of the policy in the postwar period was to Poland and China, where Communist influence has been strong and shaped to serve Russia's political and economic interests.

In the case of Poland, the U. S. suspended a 90 million dollar credit to the Soviet-sponsored Warsaw government on charges that it had violated its pledge to increase freedom of movement within the country. First, the U. S. said that the government had censored an American reporter's dispatch regarding a critical speech made by a Peasant party leader, and second, it had failed to publish terms of the U. S. credit providing for political freedom in Poland.

Taken back by the U. S. action, the Polish embassy in Washington declared that it could categorically deny that any censorship existed in Poland, and explained that the terms of the loan had not arrived in Warsaw in time to permit their publication up to the time of the U. S. credit cancellation.

Meanwhile, Gen. George C. Marshall was given full control over a proposed half billion dollar loan to China in his efforts to weld the Nationalist and Communist forces together into a central government and create a unified country.

UNRRA:

Seeking to prevent death-dealing riderpest among surviving cattle and water buffalo herds of China, one million doses of a new type vaccine were flown by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration to Shanghai as a gift of the U. S. and Canada.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Taft Looms as 1948 GOP Hope

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Along about June of any election year, when a lot of simple souls are thinking about moonlight and roses, electric fans, and where to go for a summer vacation, a lot of longer-range planners are wondering about next winter's coal supply, harvest time, and many other things a lot further away than the fly on your nose. Among these are the politicians.

It's a great time to lean back in a chair in the Senate office building or thereabouts, open another bottle of White Rock, light another seegar, and burble on about what's going to happen come November, and, still more intriguing, to prognosticate on presidential possibilities.

It's fun for the newcomers because it's so easy for them to predict, in the light of what's happening right now, just what will happen then. It's still more fun for the old timers because they know that the voters who may not love you in the autumn often seem very palsy in the spring—and vice versa.

Since there isn't much use in speculating on who the Democratic presidential nominee will be, it's more interesting to talk about Republican possibilities.

Perhaps that is why, along about the middle of May, the heavy backers of Bob Taft began to be heard from. Up until then, most of the talk in the couloirs was how Bricker was the No. 1 boy, and how Stassen mustn't even be mentioned above a whisper. Even Stassen's own men decided it was better for the young man from Minnesota to keep his head down so he wouldn't attract any lightning until he had found out whether his forums were more potent than the against-em's.

Now it's getting to be more serious fun to talk about Taft. Taft wants to be President. He has wanted to be President before. He is pretty much master of the Republican organization, but even if he weren't, Bricker, his present friend and rival, is more "beatable," despite the good impression he made on his speaking tour before the last convention . . . what with the leftist look in so many veterans' eyes.

Bricker has a staunch and solid conservative following. But it is a little too solidly conservative. Taft could hardly be called a radical. In fact, his political garden has never produced even a pale and lonely pink. On the other hand, his supporters prudently can point to many a constructively liberal measure which has had his blessing.

Only the other day, I was talking with an ardent administration official who has been battling for a measure badly battered by conservatives of both political stripes. I asked him if he could expect to retrieve in the senate a certain provision in his legislation, lost in the house.

"Oh, yes," he answered, "Bob Taft will go along on that."

And Taft has a good liberal record on such mass-appeal measures as housing.

The Republicans don't have to deal with the old-line bosses to the extent that the Democrats do and in two of the larger cities where the Republican machine is vital—Philadelphia and Cincinnati — everything would be jake so far as Taft is concerned. He, himself, is kingpin in his home state organization . . . and Mr. Pew, who makes the Republican wheels go round in Pennsylvania, wanted Taft in '40 and '44. It is to be presumed he'll feel the same in '48.

This doesn't eliminate other brilliant possibilities, including Messrs. Stassen and vandenberg.

Mr. Vandenberg has done a lot of the molding himself. This could work both ways. On the one hand the energy and devotion with which Mr. Vandenberg has applied himself to foreign affairs, and the powerful influence he has exerted, have greatly increased his silhouette on the international horizon. On the other hand, these activities, both in quantity and quality, have taken him far afield from the usual political approach to a Republican presidential nomination.

It may be there is a niche in the making that would need a man of his proportion to fill but one Democrat said to me the other day: "Sometimes it looks as if Van would rather be right than President."

June Again Set for National Dairy Week in United States

With production and distribution of milk at the highest levels in history, "Dairy Month" is celebrating its tenth anniversary through the month of June. Again the dairy industry calls attention of the public to the vital part played by milk and dairy products in America.

In the beginning, however, the observance was neither a "month" nor was it June. In 1937 the dairy industry promoted a national milk week for November 14 to 20 in an effort to sell more milk and ice cream. Everyone was urged to purchase an extra quart of milk on Friday of that week. It was not until 1939 that dairymen, fountain operators and others decided to promote dairy products one month of the year. June was selected because it is the time of year when milk production is the greatest.

Milk cows were first brought to America in 1611 for the Jamestown colony. In 1624 a few cows arrived for the Plymouth colony. The first regular shipment of milk by rail was inaugurated in 1841, from Orange county to New York City.

Pasteur experiments were started in 1856, and since that time the dairy industry has made rapid progress. The milk bottle was not invented by Dr. Hervey D. Thatcher of Potsdam, N. Y., until 1884.

Fluid milk was not included in the army diet until 1933, but during World War II the use of milk and dairy products by the armed forces was a must.

Trade Idaho Spuds For Rica Bananas

BOISE, IDAHO. — The fast motorships on the Caribbean run, which bring bananas to the United States, take Idaho potatoes back to Costa Rica, says C. G. Rice, Idaho advertising commission, who visited Central America recently.

Idaho housewives who buy Costa Rican bananas as soon as they arrive have nothing on the women of Central America who await shipments of Idaho potatoes just as eagerly.

Rice checked several shipments of the potatoes and found that they arrived at Costa Rica in first-class condition and the trade there bought them up the minute they were put on the market.

College Students Taller than GIs

BERKELEY, CALIF. — In the western part of the United States, the average young woman is 5 feet, 3¼ inches tall and weighs 127 pounds, while the average male is 5 feet, 8¾ inches in height and weighs 153½ pounds.

These averages were gathered in a measurement survey by Dr. Theodore D. McCown, University of California anthropologist, for the committee on prosthetic devices of the National Research council. The study was made to obtain average arm and leg measurements, and the standard statistics obtained will be used in the improvement of artificial limbs.

The 1,000 young women measured were college students and WAVES.

Men measured included 800 soldiers and sailors, 700 college students, and 300 males from the general population. Greater differences were found among the college students than among the soldiers and sailors. College students were about one inch taller and two and one-quarter pounds heavier than military personnel.

'Sailors Have a Girl in Every —'

CHICAGO. — A bluejacket recently walked into a Loop candy store and bought 14 boxes of candy. He left instructions to have them sent to 14 different girls in all parts of the U. S.

When he was asked if it's true that a sailor "has a girl in every port," he grinned but was non-committal.

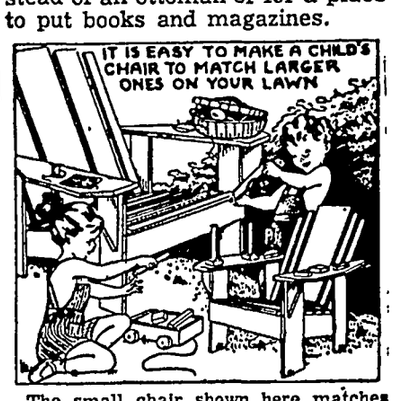
Child Will Be Happy Over a Lawn Chair

A PINT size lawn chair is great fun for children. It adds interest to any group of outdoor furniture and you will find that it is often used by grown-ups instead of an ottoman or for a place to put books and magazines.



The small chair shown here matches the adult-size chair and is made with a pattern that gives a complete bill of materials, large diagrams for cutting each piece and illustrated construction steps. The seat of the chair is about ten inches high and thirteen inches deep.

This lawn chair is made with pattern 253; and the adult-size lawn chair is pattern 269. Patterns are 15c each or both patterns to one address for 25c. Send order with name and address to:

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

KLEMME YOUTH ENJOYS LIFE IN THE U. S. NAVY

Donald J. Schaefer, A O. M. 3-c, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy I. Schaefer of Klemme, has arrived at Port Lyaute, near Casablanca, French Morocco, for further duty in the U. S. Navy. He has been assigned to a Patrol, Bombing, Aircraft Searchlight, and Weather Squadron. They specialize in Patrol Search, and Searchlight work and also get reports on weather and watch for storms and hurricanes.

Donald did one tour of duty on a Carrier and land based Avenger Torpedo Bombers. They expect to fly to Rome, and Naples, Italy, and Marsaielles, France.

They live in huts, with ten men to a hut, and have a Duo-Therm heater as it gets very chilly.

They went by the way of Argentias, Newfoundland, Azores, and then to Port Lyaute. They had a 3,500 mile trip.

While on the Azores, Donald spent a short time in Angras. In a letter to his sister he wrote, "I went into the town of Angras while at Azores and really enjoyed it. The streets are very narrow and all you see is oxcarts. Very few automobiles. Everyone goes barefooted and all the kids keep asking for gum. There are walks 7 feet high all over the island. They are made of lava rock. I really mean they are all over, everywhere, mountains, etc. If a man owns a house he puts a wall around it; if he has a garden he puts a wall around it. They were made to stop the lava when the volcanos erupt."

This is Donald's latest address:

Klemme residents are again reminded to go to the Community Hall this week Thursday to cast their vote on the gas franchise

Vote "YES" at the town election Thursday.

The girls who glorified Ziegfeld. Rich girls, poor girls, short, tall, brunette, blonde—all had the haunting quality that stamped the Follies girl and it was they who originated glamour. Alela Rogers St. Johns, the noted author, has written a charming series about the famous Ziegfeld girls and what has happened to them. The first installment appears in The American Weekly, the Magazine Distributed with next week's CHICAGO SUNDAY HERALD-AMERICAN

Do you want a modern convenience with no cost to the taxpayer? Then vote "YES" for the natural gas franchise Thursday.

LIKE MY DAD SAYS...
"Hay has more quality when put up early"

AND my Dad figures that quality hay means more milk... bigger milk and cream checks. Good hay tastes better. Cows eat more. That makes milk.

He says alfalfa is best when it's cut when one-tenth to one-quarter in bloom. Red clover can be in half bloom. Clover-timothy mixtures, when the timothy is well headed. Brome grass should be in bloom.

We put the hay up fast on our farm. That saves the leaves... the hay stays green. Smells good, too... the cows go for it.

lectricty --- God's Given Resource to Mankind

The gift of God to man was LIGHT. Life came into being and developed in the e of its presence. Civilized man has progressed only so far as he has had light and t. The graduation from the flint to the sulphur match to the kerosene lamp to the nda to the fluorescent light has made America great and has done more to elevate standard of living than perhaps any other single agency.

This and hundreds of other cooperatives bring this great gift to farms of America. On the farm, electricity not only brings lights, also energy to drive motors, provides water systems, cooking, re-geration, ventilation, brooders and other modern equipment to in-ease food production and raise the standard of living, not only on farm, but of the entire community.

This creates a tremendous market not only for electrical equip-ent, but also for labor, house wiring, home furnishing, paint, recrea-nal facilities, and innumerable items of merchandise, in none of ich the cooperative deals.

HAT LOCAL MERCHANTS THINK OF REA COOPERATIVES

Druggist says:

"Naturally, as a business man, I want to see all our farmers get REA electricity. It s money in their pockets and they tell me so when they come to town to deal with me. LECTRICITY SAVES THEM TIME AND MONEY AND THE BETTER OFF THEY RE, THE BETTER OFF WE TOWN MERCHANTS ARE.

"Speaking as a druggist, I can say this: Electricity contributes to a farmer's well-be-. That means that the farm wife ceases to work so hard. She's able to think more of r personal appearance and so she uses more of the products that we druggists sell."

e Manager of a large department store adds:

"Town merchants benefit when farmers are prosperous and electricity very definitely lps the farmer to increase his income. THERE ISN'T A DEPARTMENT IN OUR STORE HAT DOESN'T DO A BETTER BUSINESS BECAUSE OUR FARMERS HAVE PUT ILOWATTS TO WORK FOR THEM."

nd a Hardware Merchant opines:

"Yes, Sir—we expect to see the day when every farm in the whole United States has lectricity. Naturally, we're selfish about the matter. Farmers make money when they e power and we get our share of their heavier spending.

"WHEN A FARMER'S WIFE GETS ELECTRICITY IN HER KITCHEN SHE COMES O US FOR PAINT AND FOR FRESH POTS AND PANS AND DISHES, TOO. SHE ANTS BETTER KITCHEN EQUIPMENT ONCE HER KITCHEN IS BRIGHTLY LIGH-ED.

"And naturally, putting electric power in a farmer's yard brings him to us for all inds of appliances and equipment."

he Manager of a large lumber company says:

"Electricity on the farm makes the farmer progressive-minded—gets him to think of ilking machines, steel stanchions, a larger hog house. It opens the gate to many things, nd we get our portion of that extra trade.

"One thing leads to another. When a farmer modernizes his farm he usually im-roves his house, too. That calls for paint and lumber and naturally we benefit. Yes, Putt-g electricity on the farm helps our business."

HELP US BRING THE BLESSINGS OF ELECTRIC LIGHT, HEAT, AND POWER TO THE FARMERS OF THIS AREA!

Is D-X Motor Oil

A BETTER OIL?

Than the old Diamond 760 Motor Oil? Definitely yes!

It retains the outstanding performance features of Diamond 760 but is a greatly improved oil of a higher quality. It has a higher Viscosity Index, a greater chemical stability, and resistance to decomposition or breakdown. In addition, it contains bearing corrosion inhibitor, an oxidation inhibitor and a mild detergent— recently developed chemical compounds which give D-X additional performance.

● Emblematic of peace in a peace loving nation, and quietly reminiscent that dairying is America's greatest industry, the poster pictured above has been chosen as the symbol of June DAIRY MONTH for 1946.

It's a familiar scene, as American as the Stars and Stripes. A herd of cows, peacefully grazing over green fields, cows that never heard the roar of hostile guns, that never saw the ravages of war. Such a scene, somehow, symbolizes the American love of peace, home, and good eating. ●

BASEBALL UNIONS

Unionized baseball is now in the works. We may yet see the regular umps replaced by the NLRB with Bob Wagner stepping into "Happy" Chandler's shoes and the battery for the day including J. Caesar Petrillo or John L. Lewis.

The next few years may bring a demand for the five-inning game!

Possible news from the baseball game of tomorrow:

CHICAGO, MAY 30. — Today's game with the Yankees was stopped in the third. Players on both teams refused to continue until they were granted the right to examine the company books.

PHILADELPHIA, JULY 2.—Following the walkout of the home team and the Boston team here yesterday both clubs were taken over by the government today. Connie Mack was carried out by four members of the state militia. President Truman promised the fans the balance of the season would see the best games of which the Democratic party is capable.

NEW YORK, JULY 15.—Before the game could get under way here today both club owners had to submit to a demand that no pitcher could be removed from the box without six weeks' notice, subject to immediate reinstatement unless sufficient cause shall be established in hearings before joint state and federal boards.

Large crowds were on hand to see the first contest played under the new union rules which entitle the batter to five strikes.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., AUGUST 10. —Fans who arrived here early to see the teams warm up were surprised to find that all pre-game practice had been abolished by the National Labor Relations board following a two-months huddle on union demands. The board upheld the players' contention that batting and fielding practice constituted capitalistic exploitation of the ball players, deprived them of spare time to which they were entitled as free men and was in violation of the Wagner act.

ST. LOUIS, MO., AUGUST 4.— The new rule, under which all the pitchers on any one ball club get full credit for any victory won by any one pitcher, went into effect here this afternoon.

Next week will inaugurate the newly won union concession under which no errors are publicly called or published.

BOSTON, AUGUST 22.—No game today. Contest called off on account of picketing.

Little girl who can't look worse!
Bobby-socker, honey chile,
With your catch-as-catch-can style,
Rumpled miss who always looks
Very anti "Use-No-Hooks";

Just for shirt and overalls,
Careless as the barefoot boy,
You, too, lead a life of joy
If life is, as some declare,
Just a case of what you wear.

War Vets and Street Signs

A sergeant, now stationed at Okinawa, wrote home asking for the street signs from the corner of Church street and Flatbush avenue near his home in Brooklyn. The city promptly took them down and sent them to him. Ex-Pfc. Oscar Purkey wrote in today to state that he understood perfectly the desire of the Brooklyn man. "I felt this yen for street signs, especially when the fighting was on. In the Battle of the Bulge I asked for the signs from the corner of Riverside Drive and Shubert Alley at once. That shows you how groggy I was," he writes.

PEACE AT LAST

The highest priced private in the world is James Lewis Triplet of Vallejo, Calif., who has just enlisted in the air services. He has a wife and ten children, the kids ranging from under a year to 9 years of age. To make provision for all these, Uncle Sam pays Private Triplet between $300 and $400 a month. This is not paying a man to serve his country, it is underwriting a needed rest and a little quiet.

We know how it is.

The 100,000 who gathered at Louisville for the Kentucky Derby offered a keen cross section of the sporting viewpoint. For they came from practically every state, and all are sports - minded. Outside of the Derby itself, I found that they were talking about the other turf classics, the two pennant races and the Louis-Conn fight.

It was rather amazing to hear the number backing Conn if the odds remain around 3 to 1, or perhaps a trifle less. One well-known sportsman from the Far West told me that a big rush of Conn money had begun to arrive. The main theory seemed to be that while both men had been away from the ring for four years, Conn was still four years younger and he could afford to lose that much time to better advantage than could Louis.

Billy Conn

So far as the two pennant races are concerned, most of the sentiment on the American league side belongs to the Boston Red Sox. The angle being that Owner Tom Yawkey had spent too much money to keep on missing pennants forever, and that both Yawkey and Boston rated a flag. The early showing of the Red Sox indicated that they may be even stronger than the pre-season dope indicated, because their pitching is better than it originally looked.

I found that the majority with whom I talked still don't believe that the Yankees can get enough consistent pitching to win. They rate Spud Chandler as one of the best in either league, but they also say that a pennant race is a heavy burden for the one right arm. Chandler is on his way to beat his great 1943 record, when he won 20 games and lost only 4. Spud still figures he might just as well have won 23 and lost only 1 that year. He always has been a hard-working, bear-down pitcher and he still has his stuff intact.

Lots of Dodger Fans

While I found that the National league fans were naturally pulling for their home teams, such as the Cubs and Cardinals, their outside sympathy still remains with the Dodgers. It is surprising what a strong nationwide following the Dodgers have. The enthusiasm of Brooklyn itself, on the baseball side, has a lot to do with this. In picking a World Series contender from the National league, the Dodger vote would be overwhelming. Their early rush to the front only started louder cheering.

Few believe that any team is going to beat out the Cardinals when the season finally swings into a steady grind. They look to have too many good ballplayers to be headed off by any team now in sight.

Almost every other spectator wanted me to pick the winner of the Louis-Conn meeting. The only answer is that thus far neither has come into his real training period—at least, far enough along to give any true line. The only good line one can get must come in the last two weeks, when the tip-off should be due.

1946 Backfield Stars

I also ran into a number of leading football coaches at the recent Derby among the vast assemblage from the 48 states. Two of these were Wallie Butts of Georgia and Paul Bryant of Kentucky. They were talking about the job selectors are going to have in naming the four best backs of the coming season.

"For example," Wallie Butts said, "who can name a better all-around back when Charley Trippi of Georgia, who, as a passer, runner, tackler or blocker, has everything a star back needs. And he is exceptionally good at them all."

Paul Bryant, who had a fine record at Maryland last fall, began to figure out the leading backs. "Trippi is certainly one of the best," he said. "But, in addition, there still are Blanchard and Davis from West Point to be remembered. There will be Bud Young at Illinois, Bob Fenimore at Oklahoma A. and M., and there also will be Harry Gilmer at Alabama. And don't think these will complete the list. There will be others who can't be overlooked. There should be at least 10 or 12 great backs and I don't mean merely pretty good. For example, there is also Wedemeyer from St. Mary's, who will have more support than he could call on last fall."

The Big Batting Race

The expected batting race among Ted Williams, Joe DiMaggio and Dick Wakefield finds the Red Sox slugger showing most of the early foot. Williams has been belting away at a .350 clip or better, with DiMaggio down below .270. Wakefield has been of little help to the Tigers, with a mark under .240. Dom DiMaggio has been outshining them all with an average above .400, and Charley Keller also is riding high.

...training lions, Jacobs starts out with cats over two years of age since cubs up to two possess delicate spinal vertebrae, injury to which may result in permanent kidney trouble. Lions fresh from the jungle are preferred since native-born animals, used to the fawning of crowds, are easily distracted and lack the single-mindedness of wild beasts.

First, the cats are taught to walk down the ramp, with a collar and chain being applied to animals in cases where they are slow to respond. Once the lion has learned to walk down the runway, he is next drilled to take his seat, with from six weeks to three months required for this training. Finally, the animals are taught to mix.

Some Are Good, Some Bad.

Broken in at 2, the lions attain the full maturity at 7, and are retired from the show at 12, though they may live to be 18 or 20. They are very much like people, Jacobs said, some being good, some bad, some bright, others slow. While only so much can be accomplished with animals, daily year-round association with them enables a trainer to perceive their capabilities more closely and discover new qualities for exploitation.

Jacobs' attachment to a menagerie when he first joined the circus led to his employment as an apprentice to a Swiss lion-tamer, and the experience he acquired permitted him to take over the act when his boss returned to the old country. Starting with 5 lions, he steadily broadened his act, the high point arriving when he appeared with 150 animals in one of Johnny Weismuller's "Tarzan" motion pictures.

American Circus Is 100 Years Old

The great circuses of America are on tour again, just as they have done for more than 100 years. And again they include equestrian exhibitions, gymnastic and acrobatic performances, with variety added by the quips and fooling of the clown.

The modern circus dates from the close of the 18th century. Traveling circuses were heard of before 1830 in both England and America, and after 1850 assumed great dimensions. Among the earlier ones were Hengler's, Sanger's, and Barnum and Bailey's. Col. William F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) and his Wild West show traveled all over the world and gave performances before the crowned heads of Europe.

Now a Big Business.

The construction of permanent circuses known as coliseums and hippodromes has given new life to the circus, furnishes a variant on the itinerant show of enormous dimensions which moves about the country on special railway trains.

Barnum and Bailey's circus is still in existence, and along with Barnes Bros., Beatty's, and others, continues the grand tour every summer. The 1946 season is expected to be one of the biggest in history, since most circuses were unable to travel during the war years.

Wild animals, most of them trained to perform for the crowds, continue to be the foundation of most circuses.

Most people will remember Cody, however, for his great Buffalo Bill's Wild West show. A parade always preceded each showing, with Cody riding at the head of it, his long white hair about his shoulders.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U.S. Assured Ample Food Supply; Labor to Seek Guaranteed Wage; Big Four End Parley at Odds

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

To back up hemispheric defense treaty on agenda of Rio de Janeiro conference in September, President Truman has asked congress to authorize U. S. training and equipment of South American nations. Map shows pre-war strength of Pan-American countries, with "A" signifying size of army and "N" number of naval vessels.

FOOD:
Eat Well

Despite relatively short supplies of some cereal products, potatoes, sweet potatoes, meats, fats, sugar, canned fruits and fish through the spring and summer months, per capita food consumption in the U. S. for 1946 promises to be 14 per cent greater than in the 1935-39 period, the bureau of agricultural economics declared.

For the year as a whole, production of food crops and livestock is expected to be one-third above the 1935-39 average, the bureau predicted. During the period of the aforementioned shortages, vegetables, fish, poultry, eggs, fluid milk and cream, ice cream and skimmed milk products will be available in near record quantities.

With the nutritive value of the food supply expected to be close to the 1945 figure, per capita consumption should average about 3,300 calories. This compares with the 1935-39 total of 3,250 calories.

CONGRESS:
Champion Labor

Pro-labor senators held the floor during debate on restrictive labor legislation in an effort to muffle hasty action even as President Truman struggled to avert a rail tieup and resumption of the critical coal strike.

Declaring that full discussion was needed on labor legislation, Senator Murray (Dem., Mont.) led the opposition to a limitation of debate. Stating that pending Case bill was not an emergency measure, he charged that conservative elements were taking advantage of public resentment against the miners' walkout to push through reactionary measures.

Heated discussion swirled around the proposal of Senator Byrd (Dem., Va.) to restrict health and welfare funds to joint contributions and management by employers and employees, with Senator Pepper (Dem., Fla.) holding the floor at length against the amendment.

Meanwhile, the coal operators and John L. Lewis remained at odds over the health and welfare fund, with the companies flatly rejecting the United Mine Workers' chieftain's demands for employers' contributions of 7 per cent of payrolls and union administration of the proceeds. In seeking to break the deadlock between the disputants, Mr. Truman was said to favor a health and welfare fund jointly financed and administered by operators and miners.

STEEL:
Annual Wage

Having attained higher wages and improved working conditions, American labor next will hit for the guaranteed annual wage, under which employees would be assured of a steady year-round income regardless of time put in.

Boasting of approximately 700,000 members, the CIO - United Steelworkers plans to spearhead the drive, its recent convention calling for the advancement of the issue in negotiations for a new contract in 1947. Addressing the steel workers at the convention, USW Pres. Philip Murray declared the industry could well afford to pioneer the plan.

At the present time a presidential board is studying the advisability of establishing guaranteed annual wages, Murray said, and unions could accelerate adoption of the practice by championing its merits. By paying a guaranteed annual wage, purchasing power would be maintained and full employment encouraged, he asserted.

FOREIGN MINISTERS:
To Try Again

Agreeing only upon revising Italian armistice terms, the conference of foreign ministers of the U. S., Britain, Russia and France adjourned to June 15 with differences remaining over all the major points at issue.

Having failed in efforts to get the conference to set a date for a European peace conference of all nations and discuss arrangements for Austria, U. S. Secretary of State Byrnes was said to be very discouraged by the results of the meeting. At the same time, Senator Vandenberg (Rep., Mich.), representing the Republican party at the conference, revealed he would not return June 15.

Previous agreements consummated among the U. S., Britain and Russia blocked Byrnes' efforts in seeking a general peace conference and discussing Austria. Objecting to both proposals, Russia claimed that decisions taken at the Moscow foreign ministers meeting last December called for unanimity among the Big Four on all issues before other nations were invited to a peace conference, and the question of Austria could not be studied now under terms of the Potsdam agreement.

As the foreign ministers packed their bags, outstanding issues remaining unsettled concerned final disposition of the Italian port of Trieste claimed by Yugoslavia; Italian reparations; trusteeships for former Italian colonies in North Africa along Britain's lifeline to the far east; opening of the Danube to international traffic; agreement on Balkan peace treaties and restoration of free trade in eastern Europe.

Foreign Commissar Molotov (left) and Secretary of State Byrnes in lively talkfest at foreign ministers' conference.

Before the confab broke up, Byrnes urged that U. S., British, Russian and French representatives remaining behind to attempt to work out some of the difficulties confronting the peacemakers first report on the economic unification of Germany to spare the occupying countries the cost of supporting the broken Reich.

Said to have told the foreign ministers that the U. S. did not desire to support the American occupation zone indefinitely, Byrnes declared that thus far the U. S. has furnished 200 million dollars worth of assistance. An equal amount will be sent during the ensuing fiscal year, he revealed.

POLLUTION:

Tightening of pollution controls in several states has put sewage and industrial waste disposal systems among the foremost public works in cities from coast to coast.

Indicative of nation-wide interest in pollution control is a federal bill recently approved by the house rivers and harbors committee. The measure would provide $100,000,000 a year aid to construction of state and municipal sewage disposal plants.

NEW BOOK CRAZE

"Home hunger" is making best-sellers out of books on house - planning and building, and has swamped public libraries from coast to coast with an all-time record demand for such volumes.

Booksellers from Atlanta to Albuquerque, from Buffalo to San Francisco, report home-planning books among their non-fiction best-sellers.

TRAINING FOR SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:7-13; Luke 10: 1, 2; 14:25-27.

MEMORY SELECTION — And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.—Matthew 10:38.

Workers for God, and with God! Such is the high privilege of the men and women who respond to his call and who go out to witness for him.

On the one side, we have a world desperately in need of the gospel, perhaps more so than any generation in history. On the other hand, we have the gospel of the saving grace of God in Christ Jesus, the only solution to the problems of mankind, the perfect answer to man's need.

How shall these two be brought together? By sending out witnesses to tell the glad tidings of redemption and peace. Where shall we find these witnesses? In the church, for only the believer in Christ is qualified to tell others of his saving grace.

Our lesson, in telling of the Lord's calling and sending forth laborers into his harvest field, gives us much helpful instruction regarding service for the Lord. We learn that

I. God Provides for His Workers (Mark 6:7-10).

Jesus sent out his twelve disciples two by two, thus providing every worker with fellowship and help in hours of discouragement and trial. This also served to keep a man in balance so that he would not become self-willed and proud of his own achievements.

It was a wise provision. Perhaps the church should have observed it with more care, and thus have saved some good workers from going astray.

They were not to be cumbered with extra equipment, nor be concerned about their daily sustenance. The Lord would provide through the hospitality and generosity of his people.

Note that the expected hospitality was not to be allowed to hinder their work (cf. v. 10 with Luke 10:7). Many a preacher or evangelist has ruined a series of meetings by letting social life hinder prayer, soul-winning, or preparation for preaching.

II. God Gives Power to His Workers (Mark 6:7, 11-13).

He gave them authority over evil spirits, so that they could drive them out. He gave them power to heal; he gave them power to preach effectively.

The man who goes forth to speak for the Lord does not have to muster up his own puny powers or depend on the weak arm of some human helper. His resources are infinite and omnipotent. He speaks for the Almighty God. He has a message with saving power.

All too often the servants of the Lord are apologetic and hesitant in their ministry. They mistake weakness for meekness, and in their desire not to assert themselves, they fail to speak a ringing, "Thus saith the Lord."

We need a revival of authoritative preaching, of that holy boldness which was not afraid to rebuke sin and any unwillingness to do the Lord's will (v. 11). We need a new emphasis on repentance (v. 12).

III. God Calls Helpers for His Workers (Luke 10: 1, 2).

After the twelve were sent out, he called and commissioned the seventy. That blessed process has gone on ever since. How blessed it is that even in our day of unbelief and sin, hundreds of young men and women are going out to all the mission fields of the world to work with older and experienced missionaries.

Perhaps these words will be read by some young man or woman who has felt the promptings of the Spirit of God to go into his service. Step out by faith just now, and begin to prepare yourself for God's service. If the writer of these notes can be of help to you, do not hesitate to write to him. God is looking for more workers.

Do not overlook the important admonition in verse 2. The Lord is waiting for his people to pray for laborers for fields which stand white and ready for harvest.

IV. God Requires Self-Denial of His Workers (Luke 14:25-27).

The mighty works and the powerful words of Jesus made it impossible for people to ignore him. Multitudes followed him, but he, knowing the fickleness of the human heart, faced them with the real demands of discipleship.

The Lord was never concerned with mere numbers. He wanted followers whose hearts were right. The church has broken down its testimony in the world by its frantic desire for more members, great crowds, large church buildings, at the expense of compromise of testimony.

The requirement of the Lord is unmistakable. A man or woman who is to serve him must put him first. No worldly ambition or earthly friendship, no, not even the tender love of family, can come between the Lord and his servant. He is either Lord of all, or he is not Lord at all.

EIGHT-POINT DAIRY PRODUCTS OUTLINE LISTED FOR JUNE

Production And Quality Aim For 1946-47

Efficient Production and Quality Improvement Is Aim In Iowa For 1946-47

All Iowa dairy interests this month launched the 1946-47 eight-point Dairy Program aimed at maintaining efficient production and improving the quality of Iowa dairy products.

A. R. Porter, Iowa State College dairy specialist, said this week that the Iowa Agricultural Extension Service is cooperating with the Iowa State Dairy association in acquainting all Iowa farmers with the continued need for milk this year.

Eight Steps

Behind the slogan "Efficiency and Quality Pay" the Iowa program covers eight important steps in a sound dairy program, Porter said. These eight points are similar to ones in the national dairy program.

The eight steps which cover the entire year's program include:

1. Feed each cow for economical production.
2. Improve pastures to increase milk dollars.
3. Harvest and cure roughage to retain feed value.
4. Keep production records for better herd management.
5. Breed for improved herd replacements.
6. Produce quality milk and cream for greater returns.
7. Plan layouts, equipment and methods to cut labor costs.
8. Maintain herd health for maximum efficiency.

Porter pointd out that milk cow numbers in the state have been declining making it necessary to maintain production from remaining cows.

Improve Hay

The June phase of the program is aimed at the third point, which calls for improving the quality of hay and roughage in order to maintain milk production at lowered feed costs. Improving hay and roughage quality means cutting the crop at the right stage and handling it to save the leaves and green color. Alfalfa should be cut when it is one-tenth in bloom. Red clover can be in half bloom. Bromegrass should be in bloom, and mixtures of clover and timothy should be cut when the timothy is well headed.

ELEANOR JAKOUBEK 4-H CO. PRESIDENT

These girls take over their duties on October first. Until that time they will work with the present, officers: Helen Formanek Clarice Nelson, Gloria Greiman and Betty Lacey.

The climax of the day's program was a short playlet by the Bingham Boosters during which a representative from each club marched to the platform and deposited a gift for the Famine Relief Fund. The total gift was $18.27.

This was the first all day Rally Day for Hancock county 4-H girls since the war began and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Singing of club songs was under the direction of Miss Schram and Mrs. Donald Frank with the Ell Tip-Topper girls giving introductions to the songs. The business meeting was conducted by Helen Formanek and the other county officers assisted by the local club presidents.

Klemme Votes For Natural Gas Franchise By 212-1

PLAN ANNUAL SHOW FOR AUG. 12-13

The 4-H leaders meeting with the Hancock County Junior Achievement Show board made plans for the 1946 Junior Achievement Show to be held August 12th and 13th.

Premiums will probably be slightly lower than in 1945 because of more projects being exibited. The leaders are still working with the fair board to get some action on the proposed expansion of 4-H club work in the county. The need for 4-H exhibition building and grounds is still paramount in order to get the amount of premium received by surrounding counties The State law requries certain standards and have cut the premiums out until such time when the county can qualify again. Action should be taken in 1946 and 47 to help correct the situation according to local leaders.

SPECIAL ELECTION HELD THURSDAY

Most Residents Natural Gas Wanted By

At the special election held at the Community Hall last Thursday, Klemme voters favored the gas franchise by th overwhelming vote of 212 for the proposition and only 1 lone vote against the franchise.

The Peoples Natural Gas Co. of Omaha, Nebraska, were asking for a franchise to bring natural gas into Klemme and to use the streets and alleys for that purpose. One of the men from the Company whom we contacted after the election remarked, "WELL, I guess Klemme folks REALLY want gas." He said it was the biggest percentage in favor of a franchise that he could recall and the Company was very well pleased with the fine reception they got in Klemme.

Because of present conditions, the Company is making no promise as to when the gas mains can be brought into Klemme, but an official of the Company assured The Times that they would do everything in their power to bring the lines into Klemme at the earliest possible date, whenever materials can be procured.

Roughly guessing, it will probably be not earlier than next year, but at least Klemme residents are now assured of gas service in the not too far distant future.

U. S. WANTS PEACE MADE IN EUROPE

Byrnes Signals U. S. Offensive To Win the Peace; Congressional Chiefs Oppose Service Merger

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of (Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FOREIGN POLICY:
Byrnes Reports

Back from the foreign ministers' parley in Paris, Secretary of State Byrnes took to the radio to air this country's position on the important question left at issue and reaffirm its determination to press firmly but patiently ahead for world understanding despite all obstacles.

While the U. S. may be tempted to pull out of Europe because of the difficulties encountered in drawing a peace without sacrifice of our principles, to do so would be to risk the possibility of another world war in which we would again have to participate, Byrnes said. Therefore, we must take the offensive to assure adoption of U. S. principles, he said.

Bluntly attributing existing differences to Russian jockeyings for advantage, Byrnes declared that the crying need was for a European peace paving the way for orderly production and distribution. If the Soviets continued to block the making of peace and the convening of a peace parley, the U. S. will feel obligated to ask the United Nations under article 14 of the charter to recommend terms of a settlement.

In reporting on the Paris parley, Byrnes outlined these differences between the U. S. and Russia:

Reparations—While Russia demanded the payment of 100 million dollars in reparations from Italy out of production, the U. S. balked because the financial help we are furnishing Italy to get back on her feet would thus be diverted for the benefit of another country.

Venezio Giulia—U. S. resistance to Russian demands that this strategic province embracing Trieste be handed over to Yugoslavia was based on the fact that 500,000 Italians presently living there would be placed under foreign rule. Instead, the U. S. recommended drawing a boundary along racial lines.

Balkans—Settlement of Balkan treaties was obstructed by Russia's unwillingness to freeing the Danube river for international commerce.

NEW AUTOS:
Another Price Raise

In compensating automobile manufacturers for increased steel costs resulting from wage hikes in the industry the OPA scheduled new price increases averaging 4 to 5 per cent for new cars to be added to the $1 to $60 boosts previously allowed.

Shortages Curb Output

Continuing parts shortages blocked all-out automobile production, with a scarcity of seat-back and cushion springs slowing up completion of assemblies in Ford, General Motors and Willys-Overland factories.

CONGRESS:
Hit Merger

While calling for closer co-operation between the army and navy departments, the chairmen of congressional naval committees warned Secretary of the Navy Forrestal not to enter into a compromise with Secretary of War Patterson for merging the services since congress would not approve of such a consolidation.

"We believe the bill (for merger) accentuates the differences between the services," Senator Walsh and Representative Vinson of the senate and house naval committees declared. "Its enactment . . . would widen the breach since naval officers are convinced . . . that naval aviation and amphibious operations played a great part in winning the war. They are also convinced . . . naval aviation and amphibious forces will play a major role in preventing any potential enemy from bringing war to our shores."

Secretary of Agriculture (left) discusses world food situation with FAO Director Sir John Boyd (center) and UNRRA head La Guardia at meeting of United Nations food and agriculture organization at Washington, D. C.

COLLEGES:
Crowded Future

Because of the shortages of housing, facilities, books and teachers, the nation's colleges will be unable to take care of a postwar rush partly prompted by the G.I. bill of rights educational benefits for vets.

In reviewing the college picture for next fall, Reconversion Director Snyder declared that only half of the 2 million people desiring to enroll in higher schools of learning will be able to do so, including 690,000 vets. In 1946-'47 alone, the government will spend at least 1 billion dollars on G.I.s, he said, with expenditures over the years totaling 6 billion.

U. N.:
FAO Meets

Formation of a United Nations food administration to direct world food policies during the period of scarcity and reconstruction was urged by Herbert Hoover at the opening session of the U. N.'s food and agriculture organization in Washington, D. C.

While such an administration would co-ordinate governmental efforts at relieving the critical food situation, Hoover recommended that it set its sights at restoring private distribution and production of farm machinery, fertilizer and other material as quickly as possible.

Declaring charity programs were wasteful and inefficient, Hoover said private commerce could provide more economical and reliable service to farmers, merchants and consumers.

SPEEDSTERS:

Having passed qualifying tests, 33 speedsters were entered in the first renewal 500 mile automobile race at Indianapolis since 1941 with $100,000 in prize money at stake.

With drivers required to average 115 miles an hour or better in four runs on the 2½ mile track in order to qualify for the Memorial Day event, the veteran Cliff Bergere chalked up the fastest speed in the early trials at 126.47 miles per hour.

World Farmers Unite

The International Federation of Agriculture, the first such international organization comprised of individual memberships by farmers' organizations from most of the nations represented in U. N., comes into being as a result of a meeting of farm leaders from throughout the world in London.

James Turner, president of the British National Farmers union, was the moving spirit in calling the London conference and in formation of the new organization. As head of a delegation of British farmers which traveled half-way around the world to study conditions in Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States, he found a widespread belief that the primary producers of the world must organize if they were to be protected against uncertainties of the postwar period.

Put Sales Goal At 200 Billion If Strikes End

CHICAGO.—A total of 200 billion dollars in merchandise still could be produced and sold in 1946 if strikes and threats of strikes could be eliminated, Gene Flack, vice president of the National Federation of Sales Executives, declared here recently.

As an annual sales goal for coming years, Mr. Flack put 140 billion dollars as a satisfactory figure. Such a total would provide 53½ million jobs, he said, "enough to make certain that this nation will avoid any possibility of a depression."

Flack asserted that if the engineering and sales abilities of American manufacturers could lift sales to a total of 150 billions during the war years, certainly America could make another 33 per cent increase.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Atomic War Could Force Return to Primitive Life

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Mid-June welcomes a gathering to Washington which will deal with a subject more important to you and me than anything I can think of.

The meeting is described as an "institute on the control of atomic energy." At about the same time, the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy will be meeting too.

At the "institute" in Washington, authorities will explain just what effect atomic energy can have on your life if you are one of those who aren't going to be destroyed by it. I was going to say "one of the lucky ones," but you won't be lucky, if atomic warfare starts, even if you are among those whose lives are spared.

We have all heard a lot of dire prophecies about what the atom bomb can do, if it once gets on the loose. Also, what wonders atomic energy can perform in building a better world, if it is confined to peaceful and productive activity.

But by far the most impressive footnote on the subject came to me in the repeated words of a scientist speaking not scientifically, or for quotation, but very intimately of his own private thoughts, and his own personal plans.

He has lectured a great deal on the subject of atomic energy, and is one of those intimately concerned with its development. Suddenly, one day he realized that he had better make some personal plans to prepare for the future in this atomic age of which he had spoken so much. His work is near one of the several prime targets of any enemy bombs that would be dropped.

No Refuge From A-Bomb

So he began to consider. Should he try to get transferred to some smaller institution, located in a little town? That, he considered, would not help much. He has a farm, but he is not a farmer. Should he move onto the farm immediately, learn as much as he could about farming, and plan to live there where he would be comparatively safe? The farm is far from any large city, tucked in the hills.

Then he started planning. He would have to learn a lot more than farming. He would have to learn to card wool, for instance; his wife would have to learn to spin, to weave, to make soap, to fabricate all the things you buy in stores.

He would have to lay in tools, and enough other supplies to last him the rest of his lifetime.

Well, perhaps all that could be done. Then he realized that even at that, he wouldn't be safe. He would have to build barbed wire entanglements, and obtain machine guns and other weapons with which to defend himself . . . for with the refugees who escaped, starving, from the cities, the few who had food would be at the mercy of the hungry mobs.

If I had heard those statements from a lecture platform, or read them in a magazine, I might have passed them by as sensationalism. But the statements weren't in a magazine, or spoken from a platform. They were said over the luncheon table in the quiet corner of a club. The speaker wasn't trying to "sell" his ideas to anybody. He wasn't trying to persuade anybody to do anything, or to get publicity. He was thinking out loud about what he considered an acute personal problem.

In the end it left him baffled. There is no defense.

The only hope is to make the United Nations work.

SENATE COMMITTEE ACTS

Farm Prices Taken Out of OPA

WASHINGTON. — Power to say when price ceilings should be lifted from food and other farm products was taken away from OPA and given to Secretary of Agriculture Anderson by the senate banking committee which is considering the price control bill.

Chairman Wagner (D., N. Y.) announced after a closed meeting that the vote was 12 to 2.

Tentatively, the committee agreed on a general plan for ending the wartime controls over prices as production of goods begins catching up with demand. It embraces three main points:

1. A policy formula, proposed by Senator Barkley (D., Ky.), calling for removal of price ceilings by the end of the year on all commodities not important to business costs or to living costs, and removal of other ceilings when supply and demand reach a ratio where a price increase other than a temporary fluctuation would not result.

Independent Appeal Board.

2. Creation of an independent board of three members to which industries could appeal for removal of ceilings if the Office of Price Administration declined to lift them. This was proposed by Senator Millikin (R., Colo.).

3. Lodging of control over food and farm prices in the department of agriculture.

A subcommittee of three was appointed to put this three-point program into legislative language. The members are Senators McFarland (D., Ariz.), Fulbright (D., Ark.) and Millikin (R., Colo.). When they have completed their draft, the full committee will consider and take a formal vote on it.

Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) sponsored the proposal to let the secretary of agriculture decide when ceilings should be lifted from farm products. Under his amendment, the secretary would advise every 30 days whether supplies of a farm commodity had reached sufficient volume so that ceilings should come off. If he decided they had, OPA would be required to lift them. The secretary also could direct a price increase for a commodity.

Hires Vets and War Widows Only; Finds Them Best

VALLEY STREAM, N. Y.—Last January the Commonwealth Aircraft, Inc., inaugurated the experiment of hiring only veterans or war widows in its plants, to the exclusion of others. The plan worked so well that it has been made a permanent policy.

Raymond Voyes, president, said the company, which manufactures private planes, currently has 500 veterans employed at the Valley Stream plant and expects to hire 1,000 more. In addition, 1,500 more veterans will be added to its Port Washington, N. Y., plant.

Mr. Voyes said that not only have production figures increased, but personnel turnover among veterans is only 0.5 per cent, compared with about 3½ per cent among the company's civilian employees.

HOOVER AND REPORTERS

WASHINGTON. — When Herbert Hoover staged a press conference after his talk with President Truman and Secretary of Agriculture Anderson, newsmen immediately asked what President Truman had told him.

The former chief executive—who had as rough a time with the press as any United States President in this century—replied with deep feeling:

"There ought to be a law," he said, "against anyone repeating what the President has said to him."

Hoover also refused to answer any questions about administration measures to meet the European emergency, and would not give any opinion when asked if U. S. rationing might be necessary.

ARMY DENTISTS

At long last Maj. Gen. Norman Kirk, who has the reputation for hoarding more medical manpower than any other surgeon general in history, has decided to let a few more doctors slip through his fingers and go back to civilian practice.

He has decreed that all medical corps officers who have served 30 months as of May 1 can be released from the army before June 30.

However, this does not apply to army dentists, who are now getting to be the forgotten men of the U. S. army.

For some strange reason best known to General Kirk, general service doctors can get out of the army after 30 months, but a dentist must remain in 39 months. And today there are hundreds of patriotic dentists who gave up good practices to join the army, now marking time at army posts, unable to get discharged.

Furthermore, the brass hats have permitted the discharge of many younger dentists, while older men have to stay on. Many of the youngsters, educated at army expense, have been declared "essential to civilian practice" and discharged, while older men with families to support, can't get out. This means that younger dentists get their civilian practice firmly established before older men can even begin to look for scarce office space.

HOW TO HANDLE LEWIS

Towering Gov. Bob Kerr of Oklahoma, who packs close to 250 pounds and a droll wit, tells this story about a chat with a "prominent Republican" during a recent visit to Washington.

"Why doesn't Truman do something about John L. Lewis," complained the GOP-er, "instead of sitting around on his hands while Lewis ties up production in the entire country?"

"Lewis is a tough-man to handle," said Kerr. "What would you suggest that the President do?"

"I could give him plenty of ideas if I had the chance."

"Okay," said Kerr. "I'm going to give you the chance. I'm a close friend of Harry Truman. In fact, I am going to see him tomorrow morning. And I happen to know that right now, more than anything in the world, he wants the answer to this coal strike. So you just sit down and write out the solution and I'll give it to him the first thing in the morning."

The discussion ended right there.

RAIL BITTERNESS

For a long time, bad blood had existed between the trainmen-engineer brotherhoods and the other three—conductors, switchmen and firemen. It has been somewhat like the CIO-AFL row, but the bitterness deepened after the Roosevelt arbitration dispute.

Whitney, at the time, sent a letter to all his trainmen excoriating the other brotherhoods for refusing to arbitrate—a letter which doesn't put him in such a good light today. Among other things, he made up a little poem which read:

"Three blind mice—hear how they talk!
They all refuse to arbitrate—
They're gambling with their country's fate—
Though the hour is getting late
For the three blind mice."

"Were they afraid to trust the President?" Whitney asked his fellow trainmen in the round-robin letter. "Or is it possible that they (the other three brotherhoods) were playing organization politics in the hope that they may strengthen their numerical and financial condition?"

INS foreign news chief J. C. Oestreicher tells about the pompous general who gathered a group of war correspondents and bored them by outlining the broad strategic situation without giving them any worthwhile news. When the general asked for questions, newsboy Johnny Florea promptly double-talked: "That is great, General. But when will your troops take Unterstitzen on the Bleiweis?" . . . The general looked uncertainly at his maps. Of course there was no such town. He asked Florea to repeat the query. The reporter did so, emphasizing that Berlin could not possibly be reached unless the Bleiweis was crossed and Unterstitzen captured. Afraid to admit he didn't know something, the general confidently replied: "My men will take it in a few days at the most."

Probably the most bumptious publisher of all was James Watson Webb. During the Civil War he wrote to Lincoln suggesting that he be made a major-general. Lincoln offered him the slightly lower rank of brigadier-general. Webb returned the commission with the words "Respectfully declined — J. W. Webb" written across it.

Some legislators are again whooping up plans to clamp a nix on newscasters who tell the truth about them. Which isn't anything novel. Years ago, only reporters who were friendly to Congressmen were allowed to enter the Halls of Congress. Henry Clay fought such undemocratic procedures. He pointed out: "Liberty is not the private property of Congress. It is America's heritage. If freedom is only accorded to our friends, then we are the foes of democracy."

When Floyd Gibbons covered China for a news service, he didn't communicate with his home office for many weeks. Finally Gibbons' editor asked another news service to cable their correspondent in China and find out what happened to Floyd.

The whimsical newsman cabled his retort: "Have located Gibbons in the bar-room of Cathay Hotel in Shanghai. Do you want me to interview him?"

John Barrymore was arrested for speeding in a hick town. At the courthouse he rushed to the phone.

Inquiring photogger Sam Mellor stopped a group of ex-G.I.s to ask what they thought of the way Congress is treating returning servicemen.

"Do you think," asked the newsman, "that Congress kept its promise and received the vets with open arms?"

"That's the trouble," niftied an ex-G.I. (bandleader Herbie Fields), "Congress welcomed us with open arms—instead of open minds."

Just after the last election FDR had an appointment with a visiting Gov. But due to a meeting on war matters, he was detained.

"Mr. President," his secretary said, "I guess you know you have kept the Governor of Massachusetts waiting four minutes."

"That's not so bad," winked Roosevelt. "I intend to keep the Governor of New York waiting four years."

During the early 1800s America's gazettes were very prim and dull. Editors recoiled in horror at the thought of dealing in personalities. But one New York newspaper blew the lid off this staid attitude—with a bang — by publishing the first interview. An interview with a prostitute!

There has been no satisfactory agreement among scholars or etymologists on the meaning of the word "Selah" — which appears so often in the Book of Psalms.

not know the extent of eserves in the Colorado
— and they still don't know. Many veins have been merely tapped and new ones are constantly being discovered. In spite of all obstacles Coloradoans have dug and blasted three billion dollars' worth of precious and industrial metals from the granite warehouses within its borders. More than 250 minerals have been discovered within the state, between 35 and 50 of them now being extracted for market. Colorado is first among the states in vanadium and uranium, third in gold, fourth in tungsten, fifth in silver, sixth in lead, seventh in copper and fifteenth in zinc. It leads the world in molybdenum production.

These Coloradoans probed and blasted and swore, as they went deeper and deeper into the granite treasure chest. In 1862, A. M. Cassedy drilled in a canyon near Florence and struck oil, after petroleum had been found bubbling on the surface of Oil creek. They found Colorado shales containing enough recoverable oil to equal present production for 50 years. The recently opened Rangely oil field on the western slope is the most sensational find in years. Natural gas was discovered over a wide area, and helium gas struck in Las Animas county.

Beneath the surface of the good earth they found coal, too — enough of it to last the nation for 700 years! Colorado ranks first among the states in coal reserves, most of them in the San Juan basin, Moffat county, all along the Utah border and extending under the foothills on the eastern slope from the Wyoming border to New Mexico.

The Colorado plainsmen were sifted, too, and the unfit were blown out, starved out and sent back home. Where there is life there must be water — every Coloradoan knows that. Cowmen, sheepmen, beet growers, truck gardeners, fruit growers, hay ranchers and general farmers must have water. They got it. They dug wells deep in the ground. They constructed dams in the canyons to store the melted snow; they dug canals and ditches; they irrigated the rich, thirsty soil.

They homesteaded in the Great American desert and they made it bloom. The beet and potato industry around Greeley, founded by the old Union colony, is a monument to pioneers in irrigation. All along the South Platte basin, from Denver and Fort Collins to Sterling and Julesburg, is a mighty agricultural empire. The Arkansas river waters developed a famed valley that produces beets, melons, fruit and garden truck for the nation. From Canon City through Rocky Ford to Lamar and the Kansas line is another agricultural wonder brought about by irrigation.

In between the rivers, the non-irrigated farms and ranches now produce wheat, corn, hay, beans, potatoes and other crops. Thousands of head of sheep and cattle are grown and dairying is statewide. The Western Slope, the San Luis valley, and all mountainous areas below timberline are havens for farms, ranches and orchards. Snow-capped peaks often look down on blossoms in the valley below.

With raw materials near at hand, Colorado progressed industrially too. Mills were built to process the ores. Steel plants grew up at Pueblo, the Pittsburgh of the Rockies. Colorado has foundries, brick kilns, canning plants, sugar factories, food processing plants, creameries, cheese factories and scores of other manufacturing plants. Colorado's granite, marble, limestone, sandstone and lavas are known to builders the world around. Sawmills still flourish near its great forests.

Colorado clasped its riches tightly to its bosom and said, "you can have them — if you deserve them." The men and women of Colorado accepted the challenge. They conquered the mountains and plains. They built cities and factories and schools. They blasted highways out of solid granite. They made it easy for others to "Come Up to Cool Colorado," where the sublimity of the Rockies inspired Katherine Lee Bates to write "America the Beautiful."

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

Corn Crib

By W. J. Dryden, WNU Farm Editor.

Here is a corn crib which combines all those qualities which go to make up a building which will be worthy of a well-managed profitable farm.

When building a corn crib, it is necessary to remember that the design of the structure must be such that it takes into account the load of the contents stored. It must also have a sufficiency of ventilation, so that corn may thoroughly season, and the hazard of rot be minimized.

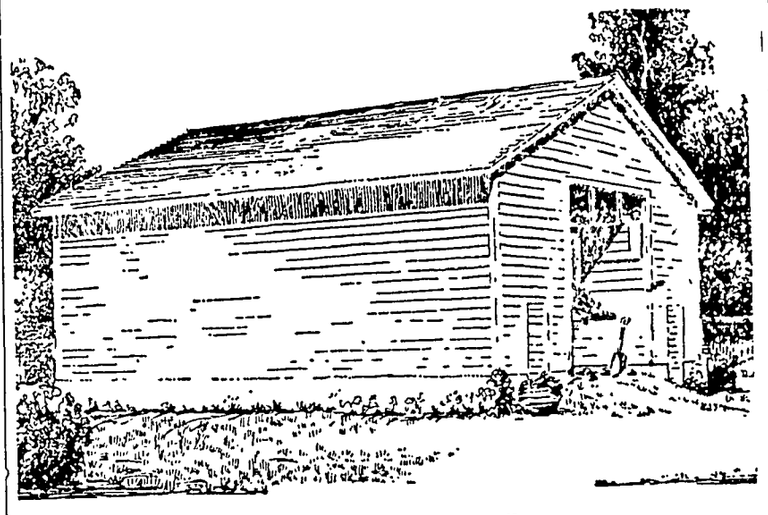
The design illustrated here is a double bin, and the total capacity of the two bins is 2,050 bushels of ear corn. The constructed bin was made of southern pine.

Grain storage bins must be designed to resist lateral stresses of the contents stored, in addition to common dead and wind loads considered in all farm building designs.

Ear corn must throw off a large amount of moisture during drying weather of the early spring or there will be much molding and spoilage of corn. There must be free circulation of air through all parts of the corn. The rate of drying is directly affected by the thickness of the corn and the ability of the air to penetrate the crib. Near the bottom and at the center of the crib, circulation of air is more difficult and auxiliary ventilation may be necessary.

The crib should be no wider than the maximum that is recommended for the area where the corn is stored. This will vary from six feet around the Great Lakes area to ten feet in dryer states. A floor and good drainage are necessary to protect the corn from ground moisture. A tight roof is essential in humid areas and also in the western part of the Corn Belt, if the corn is to be stored through the summer. The crib should not be sheltered from the wind by trees or by other buildings. It is wind pressure that causes air movement through the crib.

The A-frame type of ventilator should run through the center of the crib, from end to end, to allow the passage of wind. It may be best to block the ventilator midway in its length, but these ventilators have proved successful both with and without blocking. Filling above the top of the ventilator should be delayed until the latter part of the harvest season, when the corn will be drier and the temperature lower. This ventilator sets below and clear of the cross ties in the crib, can be built in sections that are short and easy to handle.



Drive-In Type of Corn Crib.

Another type of ventilator will have vertical sides and run from end to end of the crib, full height of the corn, so that wind can blow through the center. It is most effective but requires considerable lumber and the cross ties interfere with installation. It is also heavy and awkward to handle and hard to empty.

Regardless of the type used it should provide plenty of air circulation and provisions made to keep rats away from the corn as well as keep corn dry.

LEARNING ABOUT THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Luke 9:23, 24, 46-48, 57-62; 11:1-4; 17:20, 21.

MEMORY SELECTION—Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.—Matthew 6:10.

Following Christ calls for the best in man. Weak-kneed and watered-out religious philosophies and activities have no right to call themselves Christian.

Let us put away these insipid imitations of Christianity, which so often masquerade under its name, and face our time with a call to discipleship which demands every fine, noble, manly and womanly quality.

I. Denial of Self (Luke 9:23, 24).

A cross—that speaks at once of suffering and death. We may as well face it. The Lord never intended it to be an easy thing to follow him. A man must lose his life for Christ if he is to win it.

Note that the cross we bear does not refer to the trials or vexations of life. We should bear those as Christians, but there is something else in mind; namely, the complete denial of self-will, and the eager desire to do only God's will. And note also that this is required of every true Christian, not just of a few who are especially "consecrated."

Do you qualify? If so look at the next point.

II. Humility of Heart (Luke 9:46-48).

The world looks up to the great, the mighty, and the rich. The disciples had caught that fever and were quarreling about who was to be greatest. What a tragic and disgraceful picture! But is it any different in the church today? Men are still determined to be "Mr. Big."

The follower of Jesus sees beyond the false earthly standard of greatness, and in humility ministers to the little child. And lo! he has received and served Jesus Christ himself, and has become greater than all the would-be great ones. Those about him may not see it, but God does, and in due time others shall also know of it.

III. Determination of Purpose (Luke 9:57-62).

Following Christ is more than singing glibly or carelessly, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord." The one who starts out with him is to count the cost (Luke 14:28-33). He must expect the same treatment as Christ (II Tim. 3:12) and be willing to take it gladly (John 15:20; I Pet. 2:21).

We ought to make this plain to professed believers. Tell young people the truth and you will see that they are ready to respond to it. They are willing to give themselves sacrificially for causes of this earth—why not for Christ?

Christianity is considerate and courteous, and our Lord is not here suggesting any neglect of the duties or amenities of life. The point is rather that the Lord must have first place whatever else may call for second thought.

IV. Prayer of Faith (Luke 11:1-4).

The one who is to follow Jesus must know how to pray—and to pray in faith. He must know how to hold up the world to God, and get things from God for this needy world.

There is no one who can teach us to pray better than Jesus, for he practiced what he preached. He prayed. It was seeing him pray that led the disciples to ask him to teach them to pray. Jesus taught his disciples a model prayer. This prayer opens with a recognition of God as Father, followed by a reverent petition that his name may be hallowed; that is, that he may have glory as his will is done and his kingdom established in the hearts of men. Those who have that attitude are ready to ask for the supply of daily needs, and above all, forgiveness of sin and deliverance from temptation.

Note that verse 4 is not the prayer of the unsaved for forgiveness and regeneration, for that is all of grace (Eph. 2:8). "The man outside (of the kingdom) gets his forgiveness with no condition; but once he is in the kingdom of the Son of God's love, he lives within the laws of that kingdom. Then he does not get forgiveness unless he is ready to forgive, unless he has forgiven" (Morgan).

V. Recognition of Christ (Luke 17:20, 21).

The disciples thought of the kingdom in terms of "when"; they should have asked "what," or even better "who," for the kingdom was present and operative right then because the King was there.

That is the true meaning of "within" (v. 21), which really means "in your midst." It does not mean that the kingdom of God was within the hearts of the Pharisees, or within the social order, but that in the person of the King, the kingdom itself was in their midst. They rejected him, and so also his kingdom. What about us? Is he your King? Or do you also reject him?

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

NO PLACE TO GO?

Burglars with, apparently, no better place to go, broke into a septic tank at Alta last week. They crossed over the "catwalks" over the septic pools and opened a sewer gate. Marshall Geary is puzzled; not so much as to who did it, but why they did it. Off hand, a septic tank seems like a reasonably poor place to spend one's spare time

Is D-X Motor Oil
A BETTER OIL?
Than the old Diamond 760 Motor Oil? Definitely yes!
It retains the outstanding performance features of Diamond 760 but is a greatly improved oil of a higher quality. It has a higher Viscosity Index, a greater chemical stability, and resistance to decomposition or breakdown. In addition, it contains bearing corrosion inhibitor, an oxidation inhibitor and a mild detergent— recently developed chemical compounds which give D-X additional performance.

...e could be President

THAT YOUNGSTER playing in the street could grow up to be President. But will he get the necessary moral equipment? The knowledge, ideals and character?

In cities large and small across the land The Salvation Army is influencing boys and girls with ideals of citizenship and high responsibility. In Boys' Clubs and Youth Centers, neighborhood recreation centers and camps, America's young people are learning teamwork and fair play, consideration for others and loyalty to a goal. Hand in hand goes religious teaching.

Not every boy can get to be President—but raising good citizens is one way to get good Presidents. Today, with the challenge of leadership facing America, The Salvation Army's work for citizenship is more than ever important. Support its expanded program generously.

Mother — Goodness, haven't you heard a thing on that new auto yet, dear?

Dad—No; they tell me there ain't a chance of getting one for another six months. They just ain't getting 'em through.

RADIO—And remember, folks, to get one of those 20 new sedans being given away by Twiggle's Deodorant. You just send in a four-line jingle on body odors . . . just a four-line jingle and four cents in stamps. . . . Every week 20 lucky persons see a brand new 1946 sedan roll up to their door.

Mother—Now how do you explain that? If they can give twenty cars a week away as prizes in a radio contest I should think that you . . .

Dad—Now, please, don't make me go into that again!

Mother (a little later)—I don't know whether to call a doctor or not.

Dad—What's wrong?

Mother—All those bruises and contusions.

Dad—What bruises and contusions?

Mother—Oh, I got 'em yesterday in one of those nylon lines. It was awful.

Dad—Did you get any nylons?

Mother — No; thousands were turned away. The supply is still terribly limited, you know . . .

RADIO—And now, folks, for further details in our wonderful contest in which 5,000 pairs of nylons will be distributed absolutely free to the women of America! . . . All you do is send in a 25-word essay on why you use Zaflex for bleeding gums. . . . Merely send in a 25-word essay and the six box tops and win a dozen pairs of nylons. . . .

Dad (with sarcasm) — Supply scarce, did you say, honey?

Mother—Now I know I'll have to call the doctor! Those bruises hurt more than ever.

—*—

Dad (as the radio announces another contest in which 10,000 pairs of suits will be raffled)—Make it two doctors!

Mother (at the phone)—I can't get a doctor. They all say they won't be free for weeks.

RADIO—Do you want a doctor? Are you feeling indisposed? Clip the tops of four boxes of Byxby's new face simonizer and . . .

Mom and Pop—Awahh-h-h-h!

Merrily We Roll Along

A National Highway Safety conference is being held in Washington, with its main object safer auto driving. Well, we think its emblem would be four slices of baloney floating in a dish of applesauce. Everybody knows that the incredibly reckless driving and the hundreds of tragedies every day are due chiefly to three facts:

1. Few states make more than a pretense of an adequate test for auto drivers, seven out of ten of whom don't even know the elemental rules of the road.

2. Not a community in America has police enough to make a real war on reckless drivers, and the cops now on the job are almost helpless, due to the fact the courts let the reckless drivers off with piddling fines.

3. Big cities, especially New York, permit flagrantly dangerous speeds on crowded streets day in and day out, with the traffic cops apparently loving it.

How seldom congress passes a bill over a Presidential veto is shown by the number of such actions taken by the 14 congresses in session during the administrations of Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt, says Collier's.

Of the 705 bills vetoed in these 29 years, only 19 Presidential vetoes—or one in 37—were overridden.

PLANE QUIZ

Q. Did the helicopter see active service during World War II?

A. Yes, on Atlantic anti-submarine patrol and for rescue work in Burma.

Q. How many airports are there in the U. S.?

A. At the end of 1945 there were 3,255 airports. With the completion of the CAA program now underway the number is expected to be doubled.

Q. What is "seat of the pants" flying?

A. It was flying in the old days before there were instruments. When the plane went up or down or tipped, inertia of the flyer's body changed his position in his seat enough for him to feel the difference and he could sense the position of the plane accordingly.

CAA PROPOSES NEW AIRPORTS

The "National Airport Plan," proposed by the CAA, is aimed at achieving a uniformly adequate distribution of airports—for town and country; for heavily populated industrial areas, and for states with long stretches of sparsely settled land between population centers. To attain this goal, the CAA proposes construction of 3,050 new airports, and improvement of 1,625 existing fields.

Nine American Women Receive Camp Fire Girls Silver Medal

NEW YORK CITY.—Nine American women who have given outstanding service in the field of girl guidance have been awarded silver medals, it has been announced by Miss Martha F. Allen, national executive of Camp Fire Girls, Inc.

TEXAN . . . Mrs. Eunice LeBlanc of Beaumont, Texas, winner of a silver medal, given for outstanding service in the field of girl guidance.

Determined from annual reports submitted to national headquarters in New York City, the awards this year, as in previous years, are based on the important contributions made by women volunteers in planning all-around programs for their Camp Fire groups.

The organization's silver medal, which bears the Camp Fire emblem of crossed logs and flame, was awarded to Mrs. Edward Shepter, Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. Helen A. Davis, St. Augustine, Fla.; Mrs. Eunice LeBlanc, Beaumont, Texas; Mrs. Howard Wood, Berkeley, Calif.; Mrs. Grace Hawkins, Spokane, Wash.; Mrs. Alma Hastings, Overland Park, Kan.; Mrs. Orville Hanson, Hawley, Minn.; and Mrs. Alveda Hocker, Mishawaka, Ind.

The winners, who represent a cross-section of American womanhood, devoted themselves wholeheartedly to providing for the leisure time needs of Camp Fire girls, even though they themselves had their own families and household responsibilities to care for. In addition to planning health and character-building programs for their groups, they also aided the many social, welfare and health agencies with which Camp Fire co-operates. During the war the volunteers directed their Camp Fire groups in many patriotic activities, which included selling war bonds, collecting canned foods and clothing for UNRRA, assisting in the "March of Dimes" campaign, and "adopting" war orphans.

Injured While Shoeing Aged Shetland Pony

EDGEWATER, COLO. — "Red" Schaeffer's face is really r-e-d! A seasoned village blacksmith in Golden, and a former bronco buster, Red doesn't know yet how it happened.

"I have a horse I want shod," a woman telephoned him. "He's 33 years old—a Shetland pony."

Schaeffer went out and did the job. A few days passed and Red began complaining about a pain in his chest. The doctor took a look at him and pronounced it a broken rib.

Red finally admitted that the old Shetland pony did "press his foot" against Red's chest during the horseshoeing.

Tung Orchards Are New South Industry

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.—Tung oil, for thousands of years an Oriental monopoly and closely guarded secret, is back from war and ready to lend its magic qualities to peacetime uses. Known as "Chinawood oil" in the paint and varnish industry, which takes most of the U. S. tung production, this magic fluid is rapidly finding new uses in industry and agriculture.

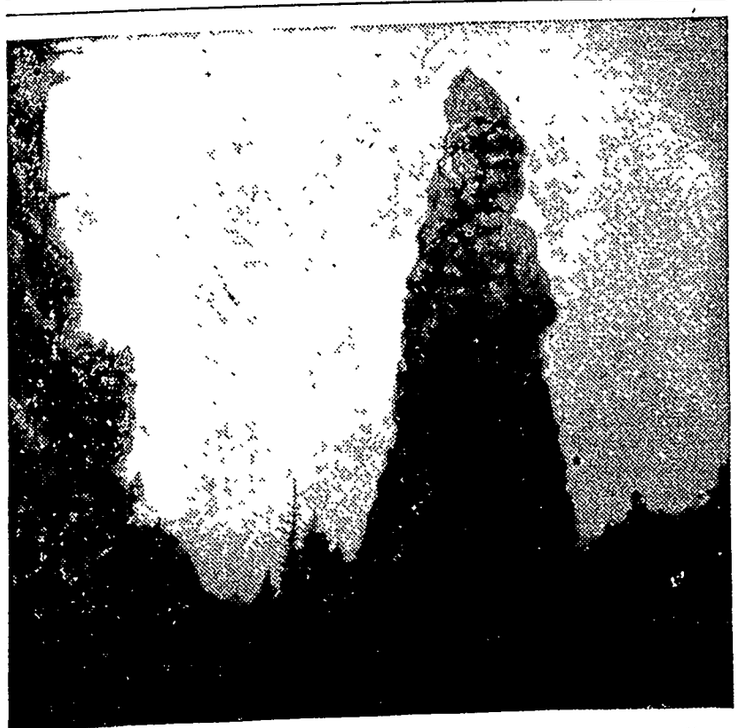
Grown in a belt along the coast of the Gulf of Mexico from Gainesville, Fla., through Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, tung orchards are an early indication of spring. Their five-petaled, pink and white blossoms have come to mean to the upper Florida peninsula what the orange blossom means to central Florida.

Marshall Ballard Jr., secretary of the American Tung Oil association, says that "to the southern American farmer, large or small, tung oil today offers a splendid opportunity for a good cash crop."

CALIFORNIAN . . . Mrs. Bernice Wood, Berkeley, Calif., honored by the Camp Fire Girls for outstanding service. She was a member of the AWVS for four years.

Horse, 51, Dies

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—Nigger, acclaimed recently as the oldest working horse in the world, died here at the age of 51. Owned by John Croker of Footeray, Nigger died in the harness. He was still doing light work, but was too old and slow to get out of the way of a bus.



MAIDEN ROCK . . . Childheart, the Indian girl, still looks across the valley, awaiting the return of Red Hand, her warrior lover, near Bozeman, Mont.

Maiden Rock Marks Indian Girl's Vigil

Maiden Rock stands at the entrance to Bridger's canyon in Montana, and legend is that it is Childheart, the Indian maiden, awaiting the return of Red Hand, her warrior sweetheart.

Enemies attacked the Indian band led by Childheart's father, who was an Indian chief, killing many and driving off Childheart's favorite horse. Red Hand swore to avenge the outrage.

After days of waiting, all of the warriors returned except Red Hand. "He was last seen chasing an Indian over a hill," they told her.

Childheart climbed the mountain where she had promised to meet her lover. She looked toward the setting sun. She cried and placed her hands over her eyes. Then she jumped. Her broken body was found in the rocks.

Childheart still waits for Red Hand. There she is today—her head bowed, her heart broken.

Sportlight by Grantland Rice

IT MIGHT seem strange to say that a manager whose ball club has been doing very well indeed could be even close to the border line of a predicament, much less the brink of an abyss. But for ten years Boston, always a great baseball town with a great baseball tradition, has been dreaming vain dreams of recovering some of its lost glory. There were the winning days of Jimmie Collins, Bill Carrigan and others, who carried the Red Sox banner high. But in spite of the millions Tom Yawkey has fed into his purchases and pay roll, the Red Sox thus far have been on the outside peering in.

Joe Cronin

Now Cronin has his team winging away at a record clip. He has come through with the hitting and the pitching for which only the most rabid fan ever could hope. Outside of Ted Williams, Johnny Pesky and Bobby Doerr, no one could figure that so many Red Sox would hit so well. No one could figure Mickey Harris winning six straight, with able support from Tex Hughson, Joe Dobson and Dave Ferriss.

Can't Hold the Pace

Joe Cronin's predicament is this: no one can expect so many of his men to continue to blast the ball with such deadly effect; and no one can figure that Mickey Harris can continue to hold such winning form, although Mickey is a much improved pitcher over past seasons before the war, when he failed to break even.

If the Red Sox had broken from the wire at a steady clip, there would have been no such excitement as reigns in Boston today. As it now stands, any Red Sox slump, which is certain to occur later on after such early speed, is bound to cause a reaction up Boston way.

There is the chance, of course, that the Red Sox today have what the old Yankees once carried when they almost wrecked the league, practically closing out the season in late July or early August. It could happen. After all, Cronin's hired men have shown power at bat and power in the pitcher's box, which are the two main spots of the game. However, an early rush to the front can lead to much brooding later on.

It is still my contention that the Tigers have the best pitching staff in baseball, followed by the Cardinals. But Red Sox pitching, in addition to being an improvement over what it looked to be earlier, also has run-making and fielding support that will bag many a ball game through the summer ahead. However, Boston's long-suppressed supporters should understand that it is still a long way to October.

Chasing the Cardinals

My good friend Eddie Dyer, once a star halfback in Texas, is shocked over the fact that his team is still called a 3-5 shot against the field.

"We have a good, sound ball club," Eddie says, "but no team is that good—not even the Red Sox, today. Too many things can happen in a ball game. Too many things can happen to your best men. There are other good teams in this league, teams much improved over last season. This includes the Dodgers, Braves, Reds and the Giants. Both Cubs and Pirates will soon begin picking up speed. After all, the weather has made this an uncertain spring as far as rating goes. I don't believe many people understand what such players as Reese, Reiser and Herman mean to the Dodgers. They are all winning ballplayers."

One of Eddie Dyer's greatest thrills so far has been the fine showing of Terry Moore, not only a great ballplayer but a fine man to have on any club. After being away from action for some time in the army, Terry has been hitting far above his prewar punch; and Terry is no longer a kid. When you look at such ballplayers as Musial, Marion, Kurowski, Moore and others—plus the Cardinal pitching staff—whether or not you are a Giant, Dodger, Cub or Brave fan, this is the club to be watched once they have squared away from the summer festivities.

It might also be suggested that Billy Southworth has turned in a fine job with the Boston Braves, a club supposed to be planted in the second division. The Braves may finish there, but they are a big improvement over the Braves of other years. They are a hustling outfit, as Billy Southworth's teams always have been.

This can be baseball's greatest attendance year, with many thousands to spare, if the two pennant races remain reasonably close, for it isn't any too easy to keep the popeyed fan keyed up when his home club is outclassed and far out of the race. The danger spots here are the Red Sox and the Cardinals, but both can run into more severe competition than one might look for. Both Messrs. Cronin and Dyer confirm this observation. Few horse races ever are won in the first quarter; this also goes for a pennant race.

We Can Save Food

A million pounds of much-needed fat can be saved each day if each American saves just 1 teaspoonful. Food saved in each kitchen here today becomes food for famine victims tomorrow.

No one in America will get sunken cheeks and a lean and hungry look from cooperating in the Food-For-Famine program, Iowa State College nutritionists promise

But the food saved by a little thought and a little planning here in America will put roses in the sallow cheeks of the children of Europe.

Sudan grass seeded in May will supply good pasture for cattle in late July and August.

Farmers who are sho can feed half corn and to pigs after weaning.

A trainload of DREAMS Come True!

Now's the time for action—on your dreams of better living. Now you can actually start shopping for that model kitchen, with its full complement of work-saving appliances . . . for that new bathroom, with its smart new fixtures and ready hot water . . . for more efficient home heating, modern lighting, and all of the other conveniences which add up to better living for your family.

New home appliances are beginning to roll off production lines and into waiting freight cars for transportation to your community. you're ASKING for more than ever before

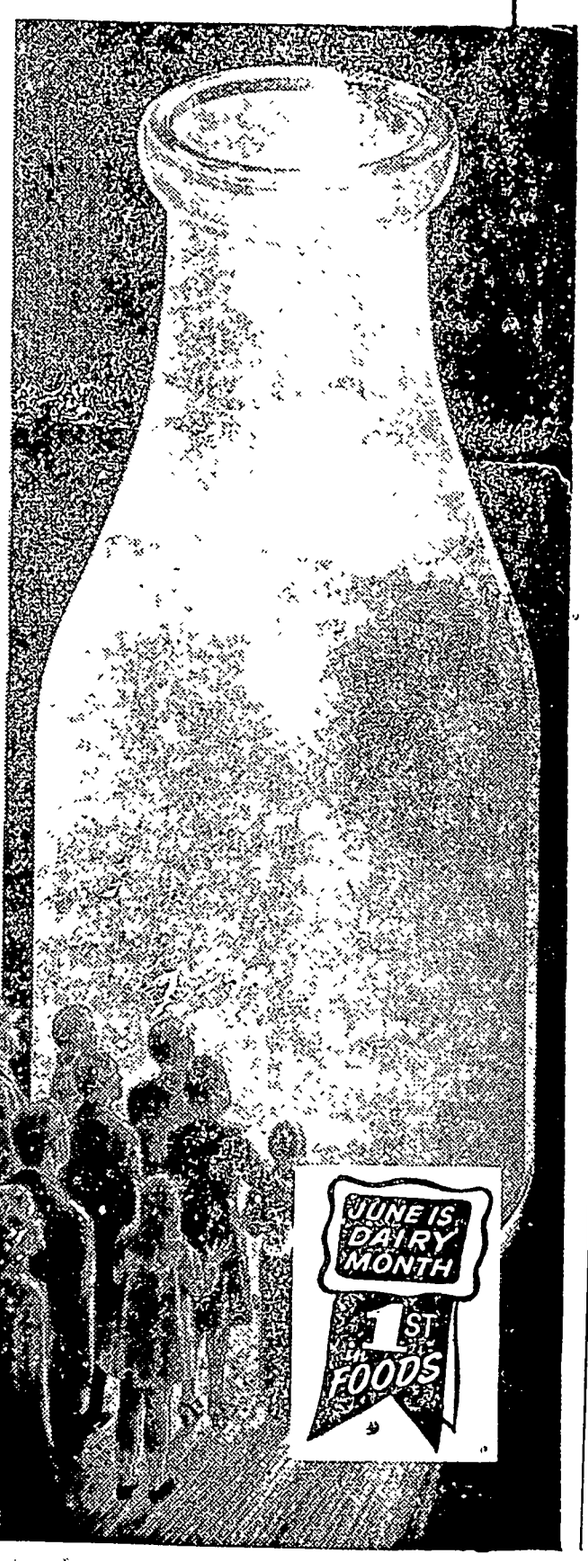
AND WE DAIRY FARMERS ARE DOING OUR UTMOST TO HELP YOU GET IT



BARELY a year ago, we dairy farmers often asked ourselves this question: "When fighting stops, who will use the increased supply of Milk and other dairy foods that we're producing to meet wartime needs?"

Now we know the answer—there's a peace-time market for ALL the milk we produce. In fact, you're asking for more milk than ever before.

In Iowa alone, nearly 200,000 farms have milk cows. As in most states, we're feeding them for top-production. Yet we still can't quite meet the growing demand for all dairy products—Milk, Cream, Evaporated Milk, Cheese, Ice Cream and Butter.

To all dairy farmers, this is a matter of real concern. We hope Milk production will continue increasing to the point where once more you can get ALL the dairy foods you want—even BUTTER.

OUTLOOK FOR MORE BEEF IS NOT GOOD

Too Few Cattle on Feed and Fat Cattle to Be Sold, Beresford Says

The shortage of steaks and good cuts of beef in the butcher shops and meat counters will get worse as we go into summer and early fall. The reason is simply that there are fewer cattle on feed and fewer cattle to be marketed. It will be late summer before grass fat cattle will be coming to market in any numbers.

That's a brief summery of the cattle feeding situation given this week by Rex Beresford, Iowa State College cattle spec- ialist.

Lowest Since 1937

Beresford pointed out that in Iowa 25 percent fewer cattle were on feed April 1 than a year ago, with the bulk of this limited supply for market be- fore July 1. The supply of fat cattle coming to market this summer probably will be the lowest since the summer of 1937, following the 1936 drouth.

For the most part, Beresford said, Iowa cattlemen are follow- ing a sound program in their feeding and marketing opera- tions. They are watching their corn supply closely and are lett- ing their cattle go to market when they reach the stage where cost of gains starts going up too fast. This means that many of them are not trying to get the maximum finish, because that finish often is expensive both in feed and feed costs.

Guess On OPA

As to the future of cattle feeding operations, Beresford said a lot depends on whether OPA is continued or is allowed to die June 30. The present high prices being paid for feeders by some farmers are based on their guess, or gamble, that OPA will be killed and that prices will start their climb upward. Some farmers in the state have gussed that top steer prices would be between $20 and $25 a hundred next fall.

Beresford said farmers should be reminded that when ceilings go off, subsidies also will go off. The removal of subsidies will mean that beef wholesalers will have to raise the price of A-A grades of meat around 7 cents a pound to make up the subsidy difference. This price increase will have to be paid by consum- ers first to maintain present live cattle prices. Still further ad- vances in meat prices would have to come to make possible higher fat cattle prices.

LARGE RESERVOIR OF WASTED FOOD

Can Help Feed Millions By Saving Fats, Crusts, Serving Less

In the pail under the kitchen sink in homes across the country lies wasted food for millions. America throws away the rich- est garbage in the world while 500 million people are starving overseas.

Housewives can help!

The greatest reservoir of extra food is in the amount we waste. Don't fill the plates with what the family won't eat. Don't cook more than the plates can hold. Teach your family to "lick the platter clean." Trea- sure bread crusts for bread pud- dings and stuffing. Save fats and oils by serving fewer fried foods. Practice food economy at every meal so the underpriv- ileged of Europe and Asia may become healthy human beings.

Just the food we waste will ease their pangs of hunger and the degradation which trails in the wake of famine force of our times. Our future way of life may depend upon the help we now render Europe and Asia.

The earliest way not only to help feed the starving millions overseas, but also to stretch our food supplies here at home, is to watch what goes into that pail under the sink.

Wasted food that goes into the garbage pail feeds no one.

Wage War On Flies!

June is the month to wage war on flies, in farm buildings and in the house. DDT can be the hired man for this job. It should be used right. The directions come with the pro- duct, and should be followed. Manure piles should be hauled out or treated with borax. Screens on the house should be repaired.

"Feeling better now that I've trimmed my "waste"-line down. Folks down my way have at last put their teeth into this food program. It's really catch- ing on in our neighborhood.

"The wheat flour and fat which folks used to waste are now being saved and sent to those hungry people overseas. Sure hope it's something that will stick and not just a passing patriotic feeling

CUT FOOD WASTE TO FEED STARVING

Essential to Get Food to Europe and Asia by The End of June

When you reach for that sec- ond slice of bread next meal —stop! Hands that need it more are reaching too.

The hands are those of starv- ing millions abroad, whose gaunt bodies barely subsist on fewer calories per day than the average American has for just one meal.

The situation is beyond the stage where any American with a heart can say "feed your- selves" to the hungry in other lands. Figures on food wasted here in the United States are as appalling as those showing what the unfed in Europe and Asia aren't eating, according to Pres- ident Truman's Famine Emerg- ency Committee.

Crucial Period

The weeks between now and the end of June will be the cru- cial period for 500 million people abroad, as rations drop closer and closer to starvation level.

Meanwhile, Americans are estimated to waste one slice of bread per loaf—more than 5 percent of the total bread con- sumption in the United States daily. One-half a million tons of wheat would be saved for shipment overseas by the end of June if every man, women and child in the United States re- duced the use of bread by two slices a day.

URGES HIGHER PAY FOR CONGRESSMEN

New Political Groups Seek To Shape Parties' Policies

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

The donkey and the elephant are getting jealous, and the Washington Chapter of the SPCPA (Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Political Animals) is getting a little worried, lest some other new and strange fauna are going to sneak under the tent to steal the old regulars' fodder—and it ain't hay.

Three very active creatures are being heard from in tones so stentorian that the bray and the trumpet, familiar sounds in campaign years, are almost drowned out.

The latest performer in the ring is the ROF (Republican Open Forums). Officially the newcomer belongs to the Republican stable, as its name implies, but some of the old timers are afraid the colt is getting ready to kick over the party traces.

Although the other two more familiar creatures, the CIO-PAC and the NC (National Citizens)-PAC, are more at home in the Democratic pasture, they frequently get their heads through the rails to browse on the Republican side.

All three are full of ginger, and not too bridle-wise.

Stassen Heads Open Forum

Chairman of the Republican Open forums advisory committee is Harold Stassen, and ROF is considered pretty much his baby. Wayne Morse, Walter Judd, Gov. Raymond Baldwin of Connecticut, and other Republicans not unfriendly to the liberal domestic and expansive international views of Stassen make up the committee.

At ROF headquarters, you are told it is strictly all-Republican, not a one dark-horse team. However, a broad-minded tolerance prevails which permits Democrats to take part in forums, if they want to.

The forums are compared to town meetings, and are supposed to provide members of the party with the opportunity to form party policy. At that point comes the rub. Old Timers don't want Mr. Stassen's outfit (which its directors insist it isn't) making policy. They feel they have had enough experience in such matters themselves.

Anyhow, ROF is a going concern. As of mid-May, there were already 474 forums in operation in 44 states

CIO Works to Get Out Favorable Vote

The CIO-PAC we know of old. That outfit is run by Sidney Hillman, and because the CIO fathered it, Mark Sullivan says that the CIO is no longer merely a labor organization, but has acquired the status of a political party. This column described CIO-PAC's dynamic activities, literature, and methods at the time of the last campaign.

Their ostensible object is to get out the vote; the real object is to get out the vote they want. A definite platform for both domestic and foreign policy is stated in detail.

The six points of foreign policy include such controversial subjects as the quarantine of Spain and Argentina, and self-government for colonial nations.

There are 13 points in CIO-PAC's domestic policy, ranging from a minimum wage to OPA, and including price guarantees to farmers, progressive taxation for large incomes, reduction on small incomes. Specific bills are singled out for support or opposition.

CIO-PAC's brother, NC-PAC, is what might be described simply as simon-pure New Deal. Chairman of the policy committee is Dr. Frank Kingdon, with Sydney Hillman as an "honorary," and members including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Henry Morgenthau Jr., Henry Wallace, Hugo Black and so on.

The lead article in their organ, "The National Citizen," whose memorial edition made no single mention of the name, Truman, contained this paragraph:

"Stirred by the rising tide of reaction, and the steady drift away from the policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt, more than 2,100 of the late President's most ardent supporters and closest friends gathered . . . to hear speaker after speaker sound the call to political action as the best method to fulfill the Roosevelt domestic and international program."

NC-PAC has a political guide which demands the election of progressive candidates for congress, and lists issues for action which include anti-labor bills, Argentina, British loan, conscription, FEPC, atomic power, and so on.

They likewise are sponsoring a "School of Political Action Techniques" here in Washington beginning June 26 which purports to "unveil the intricacies of professional political campaigning to the average voter." The school will be open to anyone; attendance will be limited to 500 students. NC-PAC says "it is believed that the majority of the student body will play an active role in the November congressional elections."

Of course, there are various other organizations, old and new, in the field. The Young Republicans, for example, who endorsed the ROF at a recent national convention; Mr. Ickes' Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences and Professions to which James Roosevelt presumably brings a hereditary parental blessing, and others.

And I shouldn't fail to mention the Women's Division of the Democratic National committee, which teaches wives of politicos such fundamentals as platform poise, the right word at the right time, how to overcome fear of public speaking, and so on. Wives of cabinet officers, wives of senators, wives of representatives, wives of members of the little cabinet and wives of top-flight agency heads are exhorted: "Use your feminine charm in the (Democratic) campaign. It helped you get your husband, didn't it? It will also help get votes."

But these are only mother's helpers. The PAC twins, and the ROF are the ones that make the donkey and the elephant nervous when they look over their left flanks.

Congress Needs Salary Boost

Wages are at the top of the inflation list.

But that doesn't mean more pay for congressmen. One of the best arguments for a boost in the congressional payroll comes from a congressmen whom I won't name, but whose bitterest rivals mention as one of the smartest members of either chamber. He says:

"The vote against a pay raise comes from the men who know that they couldn't get elected, if congressional salaries were high enough to attract a better class of candidates to oppose them."

Philip Broughton, ex-newspaperman and political scientist who has spent a decade in Washington, says, in his "For a Stronger Congress," that every independent student of congressional reorganization has "recommended a raise to $15,000 or $25,000 a year. Certainly, it would seem that the same public which can afford $500 a week for the writers of Grade B movie scenarios can afford a similar sum for those who set policies that control our national life."

A congressman now gets $10,000 a year. Anybody who lives in Washington, Broughton points out, knows that that isn't enough. A congressman has to maintain two homes; campaigns cost money. Besides, he has to contribute to "the do-good organizations that claim a root in his constituency," and "secretarial expenses and meager railroad mileage do not balance his family budget."

The thing that pains me most as I travel up and down the land is to hear the very people who scream that no congressman is worth even $10,000 a year, object to paying enough to hire a man with ability.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Country Banks Lend a Billion For Increased Farm Production; Big Cut Made in Federal Debt

LABOR DRAFT:
Senate is Opposed

Many senate Republicans, even those who have been calling on President Truman to "settle these strikes," are opposed to the President's appeal for emergency power to draft strikers into the army when they refuse to work at government-seized properties. Senator Taft of Ohio has led the fight against the draft proposal and favors the Case bill instead. (The Case bill provides for permanent, not temporary or emergency, labor restraints.)

Republicans, however, have not agreed on another proposal made by Mr. Truman that profits from businesses taken over and operated by the government during strikes should go into the U. S. treasury.

FRENCH LOAN:
Cash and Credit

Bypassing a vote by congress, the United States government extended a $1,370,000,000 credit to France to help her begin a four-year reconstruction program. The American credit provides a direct loan of $650,000,000 from the export-Import bank, and a line of credit totaling $720,000,000 which would permit France to settle its lend-lease account and purcahse U. S. army and navy surpluses overseas.

Leon Blum, chief French negotiator, signed the agreement with Secretary of State Byrnes and Secretary of Treasury Vinson.

COUNTRY BANKS:
Lend a Billion

Some 13,000 of America's country banks are lending more than $1,000,000,000 to their farm customers to support agriculture production, the agricultural commission of the American Bankers association has reported.

Non-real-estate agricultural loans held by all insured banks in continental U. S. totaled $1,009,600,000 at the beginning of 1946, an increase of nearly $100,000,000 from the January 1, 1945, figure of $917,400,000. The present outstanding loan volume is nearly double the amount of farm production loans held by the banks in 1937.

The largest increase in the use of non-real-estate bank credit has been in California. The use of bank credit by farmers increased in all states except South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Missouri.

FEDERAL DEBT:
Cut Ten Billion

A survey by a large New York banking institution discloses that actual and prospective federal debt reduction since March 1, 1946, amounts to more than 10 billion dollars. This is the largest cut ever made in so short a time and is an amount greater than the total debt retirement achieved in an 11-year period following World War I.

The repayment, however, was not made with the proceeds of a budget surplus, since the U. S. is still spending more than it receives from taxes. Excess borrowed funds in possession of the U. S. treasury were returned to reduce the debt, it was explained.

WHEAT STORAGE:
Dates are Extended

The government has extended the time for cancellation of uniform wheat storage agreements by elevators and warehouses to 10 days after they get the new agreement. The move was a reversal of original plans and was made after an appeal by the trade.

Clinton P. Anderson, secretary of agriculture, has announced that the government now has enough grain to meet its export commitments and that transportation is the only block to moving 400,000,000 bushels overseas by July 1.

ARMY GRIPE BOARD

Would Abolish Rank and Salute

WASHINGTON. — The army will have less saluting and "officers" will be just soldiers, if recommendations of the army's G.I. gripe board are adopted. The board recommended that the very terms "officer" and "enlisted man" be abolished as one step to narrow the official and social gap between them.

The inquiry board, headed by Lt. Gen Doolittle, in its report to Secretary of War Patterson, proposed a thorough revision of existing differences in pay, promotion, furloughs and food. It called, too, for new measures aimed at raising the standard of leadership in the army.

Secretary Patterson announced that "some steps already have been taken" to remedy problems set out in the report. He stated that congressional approval and appropriations would be required to carry out a few of the suggestions.

Officers and Saluting.

But the big break with tradition came in the proposal that all military personnel be referred to merely as "soldiers."

Abolition of the hand salute except on army posts and in overseas occupied areas, and wiping out any rules or customs which make rank a barrier to social associations, were among other recommendations.

"Americans look with disfavor upon any system which grants unearned privileges to a particular class of individuals and find distasteful any tendency to make arbitrary social distinctions between two parts of the army," the group concluded.

"There were irregularities, injustices in handling of enlisted personnel, and abuses of privileges in the recent war to such an extent as to cause widespread and deep-seated criticisms."

Poor Leadership Blamed.

The six-man board, which was named by Patterson in March, ascribed poor relationships between commissioned and enlisted personnel to "undeniably poor leadership on the part of a small percentage" of officers and the system "that permits and encourages a wide official and social gap" between officers and men.

To imporve officer leadership, the board recommended specifically that previous military training—preferably one year in the ranks—be required of all appointees except technicians not placed in command positions.

Proposing a complete review of the army's system of promoting officers, the board urged that it be on a merit basis rather than on seniority and be coupled with provision for demotions.

Other specific recommendations incuded a system to permit retirement of military personnel after 10, 20 or 30 years of service, or after physical disability The present system of pay was held inadequate. The board urged government food be distributed to all grades and ranks equally. Clothing should be issued to both enlisted men and officers (officers now buy their own).

It was recommended that enlisted men be given terminal leave pay for unusued furlough time; that military personnel should be permitted "normal social patterns comparable to our democratic way of life"; provision for enlisted men to serve on courts-martial, and a system of awards to provide more equitable distribution based on merit but more difficult to obtain as rank increases.

Aside from Doolittle, members of the board included former Lt. Gen. Troy H. Middleton, who is now comptroller of Louisiana State university; Robert Neville, who served on Yank and the Stars and Stripes both as an enlisted man and officer; Adna H. Underhill, wartime paratrooper captain; Jake W Lindsey, wartime technical sergeant who won the congressional medal of honor, and Meryll H. Frost, Dartmouth football captain.

Sportlight by Grantland Rice

A NUMBER of new arguments and debates have arisen that call for further dissection and discussion before the cases are dismissed.

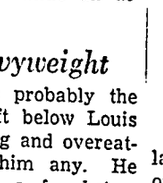
They might be rated in this order—

No. 1—What effect will the new union have on baseball and what job can it do?

No. 2.—What are the prospects ahead for Messrs. Mauriello and Woodcock?

No. 3—How does one account for the Yankee team batting average of .236, on a par with the hitless wonders—the White Sox of 1906—and 32 points below the Phillies of 1946?

Starting with No. 1, there is nothing any union can do about the reserve clause, since baseball is a competitive matter. But for all of that, the reserve clause shouldn't give big-league clubowners the power to keep good ball players over time in minor leagues, which so many of them do. Also a ball player certainly deserves a good section of his purchase price when sold to another club. Also a ball player good enough to be moved up to a major-league job among the 500 major-league survivors deserves a minimum salary not below $5,000 a year. A holdout also deserves a fairer court than he is getting today. Against this, a badly run union can do more than a slight amount of damage. This is an intricate affair that requires careful consideration.



Grantland Rice

Moving along to query No. 2, the two main weak spots attached to Bruce Woodcock are inexperience in the way of tough competition and lack of ring aggressiveness. The British champion has his share of courage and boxing skill. He can also punch. But he has spent too much of his time against set-ups who could neither throw a punch or take one. He must learn, against better fighters than he met before Mauriello, how to continue an attack, once started.

The No. 3 Heavyweight

Tami Mauriello is probably the best heavyweight left below Louis and Conn. Soft living and overeating haven't helped him any. He was equipped to be a far better fighter than he is today. At the age of 22 he could still be a much better fighter by removing surplus suet from his system through the brand of reconditioning that Tunney, Dempsey and Louis brought to the game.

With Tami it is largely a question of how hard he wants to work and train in order to be ready for one of the best openings any 22-year-old ringman ever knew.

This is entirely up to Mauriello—what price he is willing to pay in the way of hard work.

This brings us to the case of the Yankees, one of the season's major mysteries to date.

I saw them at spring training around St. Petersburg. The one worry that Joe McCarthy, Larry MacPhail or anyone else never faced was lack of the punch.

The old ash furniture was all in place. What pitchers were going to curb or suppress a batting order that included Joe DiMaggio, Charlie Keller, Tommy Henrich, Phil Rizzuto, Nick Etten and Johnny Lindell, Joe Gordon, Snuffy Stirnweiss, the A. L. batting champ of 1945? Also Bill Dickey, one of the most dangerous hitters of all time in any clutch.

A Gang of Sluggers

You had to admit this looked to be one of the hardest hitting lineups from top to bottom that baseball has known in many years. Their busy bats wrecked Panama and later on left a debris of battered fences and shattered palms and palmettos through Florida against big-league pitching.

At least five from this group were potential punchers from .300 to .350. The others were above the .290 mark. To find only one .300 hitter in this group — Charlie Keller—must be classed among the major upsets of the year.

One answer—too much spring baseball, causing batting eyes that should be clear and keen in late May to be already stale and jumpy. They'll work out of this later, but so far the Yankees have paid a costly price when it comes to the rather important matter of base hits through the first part of the season.

International Polo

What's the chance for international polo on the old scale this summer or early fall? Pete Bostwick, who served for three years with the cavalry and tank corps, and a live wire in polo, thinks there's a pretty fair chance ahead against either Mexico or Argentina, or both.

"Why not?" asks Pete. "We already have the basis for a good polo team in Stu Iglehart, Mike Phipps, Cecil Smith and some others. We also have some pretty fair polo ponies on hand.

TRUMAN AND WHITNEY

WASHINGTON.—Those who have sat in on the hectic closed-door conferences over the railroad strike report that it is hard to say who has been sorest at the prima donna tactics of "Brother" A. F. Whitney, head of the trainmen—government officials or the other brotherhood leaders who are not striking but were thrown out of work by the trainmen and the locomotive engineers.

At one time probably the President of the United States was the most irked at the grandstanding Mr. Whitney. Truman even had difficulty getting Whitney to stay in Washington. He was constantly threatening to stage an opera exit to Cleveland without even bothering to advise the White House.

This brought a sharp tongue-lashing from the President during one of their meetings.

"What do you mean to do—walk out on the President of the United States?" Truman roughly inquired of "Brother" Whitney.

"No, sir," responded Whitney—and his voice lacked its usual brusqueness.

"Well, then you had better stay here until we get this thing settled and try to show a little more co-operation," snapped Truman.

GOP WHITE HOPE

While the East and Middle West are conjuring with the names of Stassen, Bricker and Dewey as Republican presidential candidates in 1948, some strong medicine is brewing in the politically dynamite-laden state of California which may put another name in the limelight. For in next month's primary Earl Warren may win the Democratic nomination for governor, as well as the Republican.

Under California's odd election law, candidates may enter both the Republican and Democratic primaries. And under a clever law passed by the state legislature last year, Warren's name will be printed at the top of both the Republican and Democratic ballots, despite the fact that Warren is a Republican and his rival, Attorney General Bob Kenny, a Democrat.

Today Warren has split Kenny's labor support, has won the backing of the AFL hierarchy and may very well pile up enough Democratic votes to kill all competition in the final election. This would make him a very important presidential candidate.

GOVERNMENT LETTERS

The civil service commission has just issued a fancy pamphlet telling government employees how to write letters.

A section devoted to "What's Wrong With Government Writing?" reads in part: "Are you one of the people who think all government writing must be impersonal and legalistic? . . . What does it profit a man if he writes the long way around—and loses his reader? Why use horse-and-buggy writing in an airplane age?

"Let's cut long sentences into bites we can swallow," the civil service rhetorician urges government writers. "Shorten your sentences to an average of 17 words."

But here is the payoff: The first sentence of a foreword in the booklet contains 27 words; the second, 18 words; the third, 20 words; the fourth, 22 words, and the fifth, 18 words.

$1-A-YEAR McGRADY

Jovial Ed McGrady, vice president of the Radio Corporation of America and ex-assistant secretary of labor, was asked by a newsman if it were true Labor Secy. L. B. Schwellenbach is "raising his salary" because of his diligent efforts to bring John L. Lewis and the operators together.

McGrady got a chuckle out of the question, for he is being paid nothing for his herculean work in trying to settle the dispute.

The fact is that few men have donated more time to their government than McGrady. After a brilliant record as assistant secretary of labor, he joined the Radio Corporation of America, but during the war was loaned to the war department as a dollar-a-year man. McGrady is one of the men the treasury department cusses out. For his office is covered with framed government checks—all for $1 and uncashed.

stretch 125 miles and are approximately 50 miles wide. There is Custer state park, with 128,000 acres of mountains, gorges, lakes and streams, and 90,000 acres under fence, with buffalo, elk, deer, bighorn sheep, Rocky mountain goats, antelope and other animals roaming unmolested. President Coolidge had his summer White House there in 1927, and left reluctantly. "I'm coming back," he promised.

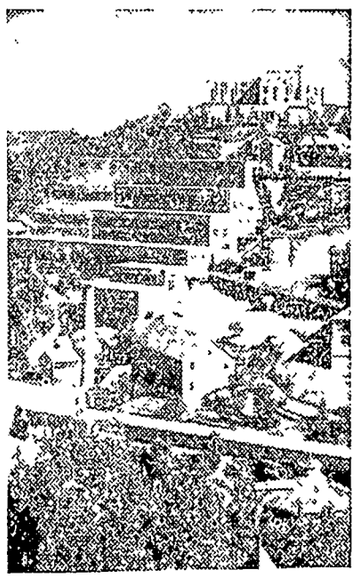
Skeletons of Ancient Beasts.

The Big Badlands covering a million acres lie east of the Black Hills, and is one of the most important fossil deposits of prehistoric life. Fossils of alligators, rhinoceroses, hippopotamuses, saber-toothed tigers, three-toed horses and other long-extinct animals are found here and displayed in most of the important museums.

East and northeast of the Badlands, South Dakota is mostly rolling prairie, falling to lowest levels in the northeastern part of the state. Big Stone Lake is the lowest point, 967 feet above sea level. The great Missouri river drains most of the state, cutting South Dakota into two almost equal parts as it flows through it.

The agricultural treasure house of America is filled with corn, cane, wheat, oats, barley, flax and fruits from South Dakota. The vast plains area has a big dairy industry, and beef cattle are grown in all parts of the state. The production of livestock is the main feature of the state's extensive agricultural industry. Hot Springs is the headquarters of horse-breeding, and is also known for its medicinal waters. At the annual Black Hills Round-Up at Belle Fourche, real cowboys from the surrounding cattle ranges compete in riding and roping.

The mineral resources of South Dakota include more than 60 basic minerals, including gold, silver, tin, zinc and others. Many of these deposits are not of economic importance at the moment, but will become important in the future At any rate, they remain in South Dakota's Treasure House, a reserve supply whenever the nation needs them. At Lead is the largest producing gold mine in the United States. The "Days of '76" celebration at Deadwood re-enacts many of the events of the historic gold rush days, when Wild Bill, Deadwood Dick, Calamity Jane and other Wild West notables were seen on the streets of this mining center. A pageant descriptive of the Red Man's history of creation is held each year at Custer and called "Gold Discovery Days."



HOMESTAKE MINE . . . At Lead, S. D., known all over the world as the greatest producer of gold ever discovered.

Settlement of South Dakota came slowly, although the Verendrye brothers, Frenchmen from Canada, visited the region in 1743. In 1804 and 1806 the Lewis and Clarke expedition followed the Missouri river throughout the area. Fort Teton was established in 1817 on the site of Fort Pierre, and in 1831 the American Fur company pushed a steamer into the territory.

Both plainsmen and mountain men helped build South Dakota and bring to light its treasures. That there might always be intelligent appreciation of the state, seven institutions of higher learning, all state-supported, were founded. They are the University of South Dakota, Vermillion; South Dakota State college, Brookings; School of Mines, Rapid City; and four normal schools. There are five junior colleges in the state.

Young, thriving and rich, South Dakota does not hoard its wealth, nor does it allow waste. Its treasures are open to all—for the reserves are ample.

Nowhere but in this column would you ever read a news note like this —but we think it's a good addition to the Utter Nonsense Department. Seems, in one city, there are five girls who walk to school together every morning. They all wait to be called for by the girl who lives farthest away. She pulls along a child's wooden delivery wagon into which all the girls drop their school books. They take turns pulling the wagon. Of course, it's all painted up with jabberwocky and stuff, just like your O.A.O.'s Jalopy. Slick Chicks, please copy.

With colorless nail polish as basic equipment you teens can turn out anything short of new cars. You've discovered that nail polish not only shines, but preserves. And it's such gluesome glop! Get out your bottles and, as the Wesson boys say, "You just sm-m-ear it on!"

Well, Pop My Corn!—Print your favorite joke or jingle on a little piece of paper. Paste the paper on a piece of plywood; then cover with colorless nail polish. While the stuff is still sticky, drop on corn kernels in border effect. Back with a pin and you have the latest Corn Popper lapel gadget.

Look Where You're Going—And you can, if you paint an eye on the toe of each of your saddles with red nail polish. Turn the eyes inward and you'll look both pigeon-toed and cross-eyed at the same time—which is definitely the Neatest Trick of the Week.

Rubber Wristlets—Those rubbers from mother's canning jars make slick bracelets. One of our Hi-Style Scouts tells us she painted them first in bright colors; then coated with colorless nail polish. A welcome change in classroom and movie theater from those musical metals you've been clanging around in.

For afternoon and informal wear in summer, this white crepe dress is just the thing. It is printed with an amusing Roman pattern in shades of pink, green and black. Effective is the bias ruffled collar, which starts at the left side of the square-cut neckline and cascades to the waist at the right side and then continues down on the left side to the hem of the dress. A black velvet ribbon circles the waist and ties into an attractive bow in front.

TAKE MY WORD FOR IT!

By FRANK COLBY

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features.

OH, THAT WORD 'SAFELY'!

A teacher of English writes: "Thanks for your recent article, 'Oh, Those Adverbs!' which pointed out the all too common errors, 'arrived safely, they were safely below, he is safely at base,' etc. I have drilled my classes on your explanation that, in describing the state or condition (mental or physical) of the subject, an adjective (and not an adverb) is required. But they still are often confused. Why not give us another of your helpful non-technical keys to the correct use of 'safe-safely'?"

Whether to use the adverb "safely" or the adjective "safe" may be correctly determined by this key phrase: safe and sound. If it makes sense, use the adjective "safe." If it doesn't make sense, use the adverb "safely."

Let us test a few sentences:

He arrived safe and sound. This makes sense, therefore: He arrived safe.

All planes returned safe and sound. Therefore: All planes returned safe.

They were safe and sound below. Therefore: They were safe below.

He is safe and sound at base. Therefore: He is safe at base.

Now note:

The flight was made safe and sound. This does not make sense, since an adverb is needed to modify the action of the verb. Therefore: The flight was made safely.

Their escape was safe and sound effected. No. Therefore: Their escape was safely effected.

The rescue mission was safe and sound accomplished. Not sense. Therefore: The rescue mission was safely accomplished.

In short, the foregoing "safe" sentences all refer to the state or condition of the subject: they arrived, they returned, they were, he is safe (unharmed, an adjective). In the "safely" sentences, all refer to the action of the verb: the flight was made, their escape was effected, the mission was accomplished safely (an adverb meaning "in a safe manner").

Q. I am in despair over my failure to stamp out "ain't" among my English students.—Mrs. T. M.

A. First of all, "ain't" is a corruption of the obsolete contraction "a'n't" for "am not." "A'n't" was pronounced "ahnt" or "ant." For some reason now unknown, "a'n't" disappeared, having been superseded by the form "ain't," a nonsensical contraction, since there is no such phrase as "ai not."

"Ain't" for "am not" is bad enough in any event — the dictionaries stigmatize it as "dialectal" or "illiterate." But "ain't" approaches the barbarous when it is used for "art not, is not, has not" and "have not" as: "I ain't going; he ain't going; you ain't going; he ain't gone; they ain't gone."

Nazi Germany Kept Rigid Surveillance Over Citizens

Nazi Germany kept its citizens under complete surveillance through an incredibly complex system of records and identification papers, says Collier's. Among the scores of various records was a thorough and up-to-the-minute register kept by each police station of every person in its precinct, including his activities and whereabouts which were obtained, for example, by requiring hotels and hospitals to make detailed reports of their incoming and outgoing guests and patients.

Among the numerous papers each individual was required to carry was a Certificate of Conduct which showed whether he had a police record.

Be Sure Combine And Binder Are All Ready

Small grain binders and combines can cause headaches if they are not ready to go in top working condition when it is time to start around the field.

Iowa State College agricultural engineers have some suggestions for checking these two pieces of machinery. Since many farmers windrow with the binder before combining, that machine will be the first in the field.

Inspect canvases with an eye to broken or missing slats, broken straps and holes in the canvas. Remember that rivet heads go on the canvas side and burrs on the slat.

Check elevator frames for squarness by measuring the diagonal distance across the frame with a straight board or piece of binder twine. If the distances are not the same, the frame can be adjusted by shortening or lengthening the tie rods.

Trouble may be expected from worn bearings at the ends of rollers, loose roller shafts or loose pins through the roller shafts. Loose roller shafts should be centered and babbited. If the binder is to be used for tying bundles, it is a good idea to check the clutch and tying mechanisms. Faces of the dog and dog stop arm may be worn enough to allow slipping. If not too worn, they can be filed square. Cam rollers, dog springs should be checked, too.

In going over the combine, the first step is to remove all winter dirt and dust, then oil and grease the machine. Repack wheel bearings with grease, and oil all connections. Don't oil drive chains if there is danger of sand and dirt collecting on them. As with the binder, the canvases should be checked and repairs made. Tighten bolts and inspect the cutter bar dividers.

If you find that the cylinder bars or teeth need replacement, put new ones directly opposite to keep the cylinder in balance.

Murder butters the scones. An obscure-looking little man was henpecked —with fatal results for his tormentor. Another of Peter Levins' tales from the Album of Famous Mysteries. Read it in The American Weekly, the magazine distributed with next week's CHICAGO SUNDAY HERALD-AMERICAN. 1tp

Although DDT is going to make fly control easier on the farm, it can't do the job alone. It needs help from fly traps, screens, proper treatment of manure and the other long-used control methods.

If hay is cut late, the value is reduced. It is higher in protein cut early.

Although the navy or pea beans are not adapted for commercial production in Iowa, they can be grown in home gardens if desired. Great Northern is a larger bean, harder and usually more productive than the regular navy. In Iowa the fall rains tend to stain the seeds and ruin them for commercial purposes but not necessarily for home use.

Keep fertilizing, especially leavy vegetables. If any one of the nitrogen fertilizers is available, it may be dissolved in water and used to water such plants as lettuce spinach, chard and cabbage. Use about 1 ounce to the gallon of water. Fertilize in this way about every 10 days.

Peas, beans, tomatoes and all plants bearing pods or fruits should be fertilized with one of the common complete garden fertilizer. This may be sprinkled on either side of the rows of vegetables and scratched into the soil. Use about 1 pound to 30 feet of row. Vigorously growing vegetables are better able to withstand injury by pests and are better quality.

Imaginary Interviews

President Truman and His Mom.

Mom—Well, Harry, you sure do look all frazzled out. What on earth's happened to you?

Harry—What hasn't! Gosh, mom, I sometimes wish I had never left the farm.

Mom—I tried to get you to stay, son. I warned you about those city folks. You could have been a prosperous farmer today with no worries.

Harry — Shucks, mom, a farmer has his worries.

Mom—Yes, but he doesn't have a flock of newspaper editors telling him what to do next. You'd be happy right now with a farm and cows and chickens and turkeys. . . .

Harry—It would be just my luck to have to milk cows, surrounded by radio commentators. As for chickens, mom, I think I'd like 'em. There's never any doubt who's laying the eggs. So far as turkeys are concerned there are more big ones in Washington than in all Missouri.

Mom — I wish I could tell that awful John Lewis what I think of him for the way he's treated you. What did you ever do to make an enemy of him?

Harry — Nothing. Friend or foes are all alike to John.

Mom—And that railroad mess! It's terrible the way they all gang up on you, son. Why don't you tell 'em all to go to thunder and come back to Missouri for keeps while you're still able?

Harry — A President can't walk out.

Mom — It seems that everybody else can. What's all this about you seizing thing to right and left?

Harry — It's just a figure of speech. I seize mines and railroads theoretically, that's all.

Mom—You look as if they had seized you, and NOT theoretically. I hate old Mrs. Gufaston more than ever.

Harry—Who is she?

Mom—When you were a baby she said you might grow up to be President!

Harry — Maybe she didn't know what it meant.

Mom — See here, Harry, what's this stuff in the papers about you refusing a pardon?

Harry—What do you mean, refusing a pardon?

Mom—It says you want a second term. Tell me it ain't so!

Harry—Gosh, mother, you told me to go to Washington and plow a straight furrow, didn't you?

Mom—I didn't say anything about an eight-year furrow. Just be sensible, my boy, and come home to Missouri where people love you, where they know you for the fine man you are and where nobody wants to scalp you every few minutes.

Harry—Think how I'd look if I quit the White House, mom!

Mom—Think how you'll look if you don't, my son!

A new hay shed might not be necessary. Perhaps some older discarded or unused building on the farm could be remodeled and utilized to advantage. It is well to remember, "don't build when you can remodel." This should also govern all farm construction, "build only buildings that may later be enlarged or reconverted."

Lumber is now machined better, graded better, and seasoned better than formerly. Farmers must demand a better quality than they received a few years ago. In addition a wider selection of species and items is available. The species have been classed conservatively. The classification, if followed literally,

In some sections of the country, where storms are not severe, it is possible to stack most of the hay in the field, using a hay-made roof, or using canvas or some other type of covering. There is no question, however, that hay stored under these conditions decreases in food value. It is for this reason, as well as to prevent additional handling, that the erection of a regular hay shed is usually recommended.

With small units of hay balers now on the market, it is doubtful if many will find it profitable to store any great amount of loose hay. The new roll type of hay offers some advantages, particularly in regard to ease in feeding animals.

STRENGTHENING BONDS OF FELLOWSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22 14-20; John 17:6-8, 20, 21.

MEMORY SELECTION—A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.—John 13 34.

Fellowship is a word which comes to its full meaning only in the relationship between the Lord and believers, which also brings them into just such a relationship with one another.

The Lord seeks his people and gives himself in friendship to them, even to the full devotion of death. Shall we do less for one another?

Our lesson presents four ways in which Christ fellowshiped with his disciples.

I. The Fellowship of the Passover (Luke 22:14-18).

It was late on Thursday, of what we call Holy Week, that Jesus and his disciples came to the upper room where Peter and John had already made preparation for the observance of the Passover (Luke 22:8).

This feast had (since that great and awful night of Israel's redemption out of Egypt's bondage) pointed forward to the Christ and to his cross as the fulfillment of the type of redemption by the shedding of blood.

Our Lord looked forward with intense desire to the Passover which he now observed with his disciples, for it was the last celebration of that feast recognized by God. All that it had foreshadowed of deliverance and hope was fulfilled in him who now sat at the table. He had moved forward with resolute purpose to this day when his mission on earth was to be accomplished, and he was to become the Christian's Passover lamb (I Cor. 5:7).

The Passover was a solemn feast of remembrance of God's deliverance from the bondage of Egypt, but it was now to be replaced by a new feast of remembrance of eternal significance They went on into

II. The Fellowship of the Lord's Table (Luke 22:19, 20).

Taking the unleavened bread and the unfermented wine of the Passover which had just been observed, Jesus established the Christian feast of remembrance, which we call communion, or the Lord's table.

His words are significant, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come" (I Cor. 11:26). At the Lord's table his followers find spiritual strength in recalling his death for them, but they also find joy as they remember that he is to come again. They thus testify to the world that they believe and cherish these truths.

Our Lord also spoke of the cup as "my blood of the new testament." The word "testament" means covenant. The Lord's table, therefore, speaks of our allegiance to him, of our loyalty to our Lord, and of our devotion to his service. That is why the Christian church speaks of communion as a sacrament, a word from the Latin sacramentum, meaning oath, and essentially an oath of allegiance.

III. The Fellowship of God's Word (John 17:6-8).

John gives us a blessed account of the fellowship of Jesus and his disciples in the upper room, and then takes us into what is indeed "the Holy of Holies" of Scripture, our Lord's intercessory prayer. Here "the High Priest of our profession" (Heb. 3:1) brings us into the very presence of God.

At the very beginning of his petitions for them and for us (see v. 20) he speaks of the word which the Father had given him and which he had given to them.

This little company of men had been given to Christ, drawn out of the evil world and set apart for God's work. But note that the thing which distinguished them in the eyes of the Lord was that they had "kept" the word of God; even as they had received the living word, Christ, as the one whom the Father had sent.

That kind of fellowship with the Lord makes a man strong and useful. Life and testimony both ring true because they exalt Christ.

IV. The Fellowship of Prayer (John 17:20, 21).

Christ prayed for his disciples, not only those immediately present, but all who should through the ages since that day believe in Christ because of their witness.

That puts each one of us, who is a true disciple, right into the center of the greatest prayer fellowship of all time. He, the eternal and omnipotent one, prays for us. Why then should we be weak and faltering in our tesimony or have failures in our life? Can it be that we have failed to count on his prayer and have tried to walk in our own strength?

The prayer for unity (v. 21) does not speak of an outward uniting of religious bodies such as is much favored and promoted in our day. Certainly where such unity can be attained without the sacrifice of principle or compromise with false doctrine it is desirable. Real unity is that of the heart.

DEEP PROJECT . . . Fishing and trapping—which all boys like to do—are part of a 4-H project conducted by Louisiana State college. Above are 4-H boys of St. Charles parish at a "wild life" school.

In These United States

Louisiana 4-H Clubs Engaged In Trapping, Fishing Project

BATON ROUGE, LA.—There's one kind of work that 4-H boys really like; it's the "wild life" project Louisiana clubs have adopted. Besides enjoying it the boys learn fundamental lessons in trapping, fur curing, fishing and study of birds.

Perhaps the most unique 4-H project in the United States, it is conducted by the Louisiana State college. The boys actually trap fur-bearing animals, catch fish (including crabs, shrimps and oysters) and study such birds as the blue heron, white heron and Louisiana egret.

Out of the project the members have developed a market for musk glands from the Louisiana muskrat or "marsh rabbit." Club members receive $50 a quart for the oil, which is sold to perfumers. In addition they find a ready market for the meat of the marsh rabbit, and the fur when properly cured is always in demand.

The wildlife project was initiated four years ago by W. E. Simmons, county agent of St. Charles parish, who envisioned the need for some activity that would fit into the life and environment of the boys of the marshlands, all of whom are children of trappers, oystermen and fishermen whose ancestors have followed such callings for 150 years.

The boys of Louisiana's coastal region would be literally "fish out of water" if assigned a program associated with the farm. They are familiar with their native bayous and marshlands but know little about crops and domesticated stock.

In this vast mangrove-covered terrain, the 4-H boys learn more about the millions of little fur-bearing animals and how to trap them and prepare the skins for market. The preservation of bird life is also taught so that, as sportsmen, they will always have good hunting.

9,000,000 Trees Are Ready to Be Planted

STEVENSON, WASH. — Over 9,000,000 Douglas fir and ponderosa pine trees produced in the Hemlock nursery have been distributed for replanting in all parts of the Northwest. Over 58,000 of the firs were sent to the Olympic national forest in the Puget Sound country. Approximately 3,000,000 trees a year are replanted. During the war years when help was scarce the replantings were not carried out. Seed is gathered in the forests each year and taken to the nursery to grow the trees.

Bemidji Expands By Making Room For More Houses

By E. L. KIRKPATRICK
WNU Features

When things got too "tight" in Bemidji, center of 10,000 population in northern Minnesota, town officials decided to move the fair grounds out to "great open spaces." This left room for residential development on a large tract that had become surrounded by homes and the new high school.

Plans call for a new-type development, having single lot fronts, wide paved rear alleys and 10-foot sidewalks. Town recovers the cost of these and other facilities like curbing, paving and parkways through a revolving fund based on reasonable charge to owners. County officials are doing the moving, using receipts from sale of property to pay major portion of costs for new fair ground site.

Another "project" is a million-dollar airport, covering 1,350 acres, with paved runways, hangars and administration building. This perhaps becomes an important link in the proposed Twin Cities - Alaska air route, and will serve as center of flying into northern Minnesota resort and summer vacation area.

Finally, there is the Jaycees (Junior Chamber of Commerce) lake shore development. This provides for an annual summer carnival featuring water sports and show, boat races and seaplane rides, a 300-foot concrete breakwater with complete water - play equipment, modern bathing facilities and a 100-car parking zone.

Briefly, Bemidji looks to "bigger and better things." As a constant reminder it has the famed statues of Paul Bunyan and his Blue Ox, Babe, which are "the most photographed scenes in the state."

Price Going Up on Contempt of Court

VANCOUVER, WASH.—"Ten dollars for contempt of court," said Justice of the Peace Paul Elwell, after Attorney Booth McAbee started arguing with him.

"Ten dollars would not begin to express my contempt of the court," replied McAbee hotly.

"Fifty dollars!" said the justice.

The attorney remained silent.

Norris Home Sold

PALO ALTO, CALIF. — La Casa Abierta, the 16-room show place built by Kathleen Norris, the writer and her author husband, the late Charles Norris, has been sold to a Columbus, Ohio, man, C. L. Cummings. The late Alexander Woollcott publicized the battles he had on its croquet court with the Norrises. The big house was a gathering place for the large Norris and Thompson clans.

Belgian War Bride Sees First Frame House

GREENSBURG, KY.—When Mrs. Ray Pickett, formerly Georgette Horts of Belgium, arrived here to join her husband, a former G.I., she found people living in frame houses for the first time. In her native Belgium, the houses are made almost entirely of brick.

Georgette likes American food but she admits that the sight of a human being eating corn was something of a shock. In Belgium, corn is fed to chickens, not to people. She has found that she likes it, however. Likewise, the Kentucky habit of eating hot bread was new to her, but she now enjoys it and eats corn bread and biscuits with great zest.

Of one thing she is sure: American clothes for women please her. And women's shoes are a delight in America, although she isn't yet accustomed to them.

No More He'll Say: 'For 2 Cents I'd--'

Before William Faulkner, the author, wrote "Mirrors of Chartres Street" for The Times - Picayune, he was postmaster at University, Miss.

On his last day in that exalted position, a friend inquired:

"Bill, don't you have some kind of feeling about leaving this post-office the last time as its lord and master."

"Yes," replied Faulkner, "probably all my life I'll be at the beck and call of somebody who's got money, but never again will I be at the beck and call of every so-and-so who's got 2 cents to buy a stamp."

How to Avoid these "BOOBY TRAPS" IN YOUR HOME!

What you can't see CAN hurt you—says the National Safety Council

1 About 5,000,000 Americans are injured every year at home—33,500 fatally! Largest single cause: falling. To avoid shin-catching obstructions and other lethal "booby traps," carry your "Eveready" flashlight in dark areas.

2 Be sure all obstacles are cleared away. Linoleum or carpeting should be tacked down firmly. In attic or basement, pack all loose objects in noninflammable boxes stored against the walls. Don't rely on your knowledge of where obstacles are located—the next person may not have that knowledge. Moreover—

3 Know in advance where your fuse box, main water and gas valves, etc., are located; have a clear path to them. Armed with your "Eveready" flashlight, you can approach without fumbling in an emergency. Be sure loose wires are out of your way.

4 Keep your "Eveready" flashlight always in the same convenient place—so you won't be tempted to do without it because it can't be located. Keep it filled with "Eveready" batteries—they're again available at your dealer's. "Eveready" batteries are the largest-selling flashlight batteries in all the world!

Centennial Ballad

Meredith Willson, former Mason City resident and composer of the popular song, "Iowa" which has been the official centennial ballad, has assured the Iowa Development Commission that the campaign to promote the song will begin soon. "Promotion will include the release of the Bing Crosby Decca disc already recorded," Willson wrote to Rodney Q. Selby, director Luncheon guests at the state centennial meeting in Des Moines applauded the ballad's selection after listening to Crosby's special recording of the musical description of our state. Willson has captured Iowa's personality in the lyrics.

"Iowa, it's a beautiful name,
When you say it like we say it back home,
It's the robin in the willows,
It's the postmaster's friendly hello.
Iowa , it's a beautiful name,
You'll remember it wherever you roam;
It's the sumac in September,
It's the squeak of your shoes in the snow.
It's the Sunday School and the old river bend,
Songs on the porch after dark;
It's the picnic ground and the whippoorwill's call,
Acorns and dew on the lawn;
It's the store and a penny to spend,
You and your girl in the park.
It's the County Fair and Odd Fellows Hall,
Meeting the circus at dawn.
Iowa, it's a beatiful name,
When you say it like we say it back home,
It's a promise for tomorrow,
and a mem'ry of long ago.
Iowa what a beautiful name
When you say it like we say it back home."

LIMIT TO 300 4-H GIRLS' CONVENTION

Each County Allowed 2 Girls, One Adult

Iowa's girls' 4-H convention, limited to 300 delegates, will be held on the Iowa State College campus, July 10 to 13

Because of the campus housing situation, each county will be permitted to send only two girls and one adult leader. With this exception the annual gathering will have all the program features traditional to pre-war conventions, according to Mrs. Edith Baker, state girls' leader.

The theme of this year's meeting is "You—a charming person, a worthwhile 4-H member and an effective world citizen."

Speakers, Discussions

Convention speakers will be authorities in their field—capable of directing the thinking of the delegates along the lines of the theme, Mrs. Baker stated.

Group discussions to further develop the various subjects will be held. These groups, will be led in their talks by a staff of 4-H girl discussion leaders trained in a pre-convention workshop.

Miss Esther Taskerud and Mrs Jean Sater Moehn of the state club staff will be in charge of the workshop sessions. Director of the discussions will be Ralph Ojemann, director of adult education at the University of Iowa.

Train for Convention

In preparation for the convention, state officers, 1946 candidates for state offices, and several others will meet July 8 and 9 for training in their convention responsibilities and as discussion leaders.

A better groomed girl revue for representatives from clothing counties will be a convention feature. Other highlights include a special chorus chosen from convention delegates, the annual business meeting and meetings of the four home economics project groups.

Methodist Church Setting For June Wedding

THELMA CHAMBERS BRIDE OF ROY ARNOLD

Will Reside On A Farm Near Klemme

In a candlelight ceremony performed at the Klemme Methodist Church on Tuesday evening, June 18th at eight o'clock, Miss Thelma Chambers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chambers, became the bride of Roy E. Arnold, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Arnold.

The Reverend Herschel E. Harvey read the double ring cermony before an arch festooned with flowers lighted by candelabra.

Preceding the ceremony nuptial music was played over the electric sound system by W. F. Pavey. Mrs. Claire Robbins of Shellsburg, Iowa, played the processional and recessional wedding marches and also accompanied Mrs. Wayne Chambers of Bryte, California, sister-in-law of the bride, who sang "I Love You Truly," "Because," and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white wedding gown with satin bodice with net yoke, having a long train and fingertip veil of illusion. She carried an arm bouquet of yellow and white roses. The matron of honor, Mrs. Paul Potter of Ruthven, Iowa, wore a yellow formal and a shoulder bouquet. Diana Sutton of Waseca, Minn., cousin of the bride was the flower girl, and the Misses Evelyn Arnold, sister of the groom, and Novella Bredbenner, cousin of the groom, were candle lighters.

Kermit Koerner, of Klemme was the best man and Alfred Aldrich of Waseca, Minnesota, and Asa Arnold of Klemme were ushers.

Mrs. John Chambers, mother of the bride, wore and aqua lace dress with white accessories and corsage, and Mrs. Elmer Arnold, mother of the groom, wore an aqua eyelet dress with white accessories and corsage.

The Misses Elaine Chambers of Algona, and Alma Carlson of Elhart Butte, New Mexico, were in charge of the gift table, while Miss Novella Bredbenner was the gift recorder.

After the ceremony a reception was held in the dining room of the church where the bridal party and immediate relatives and close friends were seated at the bride's table which was decorated in white and yellow. A three-tier wedding cake, topped with a small bride and groom served as a center-piece.

At the service table mints were served from an antique glass dish, supported on a pedestal, which had belonged to the bride's grandmother.

Of the out-of-town guests who came the greatest distance to attend the wedding, was Miss Ava Chambers, aunt of the bride who came by plane from Seattle, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold left on a wedding trip of a week to the Dells of Wisconsin and other points of scenic beauty and will be at the Arnold farm southeast of Klemme.

The bride received her education in the Corwith high school and Iowa State College and taught home economics in the Britt High School. Mr. Arnold is a graduate of Klemme High School and Iowa State College at Ames and served with the U. S. Army in the Aleutians and the South Pacific.

OATS NOW WELL HEADED OUT HERE

Fine Hay Crop Reported All Over The County

Warm weather the latter part of the week gave the corn crop in Hancock County another boost skyward and many of the early planted fields will be up to the traditional "knee-high by the Fourth" stage in this county.

Rain and cold weather the first part of last week delayed cultivation of corn and beans and some fields were quite weedy.

Haying got into full swing the latter part of the week and the oats as a rule, are looking well headed out. The beans also are looking good. A few years ago soy beans were just a "side issue" but now are one of the major crops in North Iowa. More soy beans than ever before have been planted in the county this year, largely due to much corn acreage which had drowned out being replanted to beans.

Several days the past week the temperature was down in the 50's and 60's, but has again came up to the normal warm days of June.

CROP REPORTS FOR JUNE SHOW BUMPER HAY YIELD

Iowa farmers who have been cutting hay the past few week verify reports that a bumper hay yield is being produced this year.

Crop reports for June indicate the condition of the tame hay is 84 percent compared with the 10-year average of 81 percent. Favorable spring weather, with plenty of moisture in most areas, is responsible for the heavy tonnage.

No estimates of corn and soybeans are available until the July crop report. Early reports, however, indicate both corn and soybeans are making rapid progress in the Middlewest. The stand of both crops is reported good.

The June report on small grain is optimistic, with the wheat crop estimated at 1 billion bushels. The oats crop is estimated at almost 1½ billion, only slightly lower than last year.

Plan To Install Hospital Beds In Four Towns

Legion Auxiliary Plans County-wide Drive

The American Legion Auxiliary, of Garner, announces that it is starting its fourth annual magazine subscription campaign, a plan to raise funds for the purchase of several new portable hospital beds with mattresses, much needed devices in the community for the treatment of patients in their homes. In order that the people of the various communities may most conveniently be served, these new portable hospital beds with mattresses when purchased will be housed in Garner, Britt, Kanawha, and Klemme, and will be readily available for temporary use to the residents of Garner, Ventura, Clear Lake, Britt, Wesley, Woden, Corwith, Crystal Lake, Hayfield, Kanawha, Miller, Klemme, Goodell, Thornton, Swaledale, Meservey and the surrounding rural areas at all times without charge, except for the transportation. These new portable hospital beds will be readily available for temporary use to any physician in any of the above mentioned areas should an emergency arise.

The plan will be explained in detail, by representatives working under the direction of the American Legion Auxiliary; Gifford Olson Unit No. 256, of Garner, each bearing a letter of authorization signed by the officers; Mrs. E. H. Phillips, Unit President; Mrs. C. H. Tompkins, Past President; Mrs. W. S. Pritchard, Past President; Mrs. Wm. Millard, Treasurer; Mrs. Lee Swaney, Unit Secretary; Mrs. C. L. Strate, District President; and Mrs. J. R. Keith, Chairman of equipment purchased.

It was stated by the Auxiliary Officers in direct charge of the campaign that the plan will be considered as a community service project and not as a request for donations. Donations will not be accepted by either the representatives or the organization. Every resident cooperating will get value received in well known magazine subscriptions. The American Legion Auxiliary of Garner also wishes to express their appreciation for their support the past 3 years which enabled them to purchase and maintain a new portable oxygen tent, a new portable Hangfling Fracture bed, and also to place new portable wheel chairs in Garner and Britt, for your free use. Your continued support and cooperation again this year will assure the purchase of these much needed portable hospital beds with mattresses, for free use in the various communities.

PUBLIC'S SPENDABLE INCOME DOUBLE

Personal Mail Exerts Big Influence on Congressman

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

There is a great mail mystery in Washington which public reaction sleuths are trying to solve. Recent reactions of congress presents a paradox. In fact, a pair of paradoxes.

Gradually, one by one, like a maiden plucking daisy petals to learn her fate and fortune, congress has been stripping the poor office of price administration of its powers, until said agency has little more control over prices than man over a skidding car on an icy pavement.

And yet, according to recent polls, 82 per cent of the public is in favor of "holding the line." The March survey by that reliable poller, NORC (National Opinion Research Center of Denver university) among other similar groups, points this out.

When the house virtually stripped OPA of its powers late in April, letters poured in supporting the agency, since then its head, Paul Porter, using the publicity machine built up by his predecessor, Stabilization Director Bowles, has omitted no word or act to keep his side of the arguments against ceiling-smashing before the consumer. Although congress is not now being needled as heavily as it was at the peak of the house debate, plenty of people are still asking for OPA continuation.

At the same time, of course, anti-control forces are keeping up their pressure, both through lobbyists of the interested groups, and through the paid advertising of the National Manufacturers' association, and other industrial organizations.

But as far as any one can gauge, the people themselves still want price control. Nevertheless, congress has managed to whittle it down, and many observers, at this writing, consider it as among the dead already.

Up until the unions threatened to tie up the railroads and ignored government orders, there was no chance to get any labor-control measure through congress. But the people wanted something, and when the President offered it, he received a response in the way of letters and telegrams such as the White House has not known in the memory of its present staff, some of whom have served there since the days of Woodrow Wilson.

A lot of letters I receive indicate that a great many people think congress pays no attention to the voter. This is laughably inaccurate. The voice of the voter is the one thing a congressman obeys. In spite of this fact, 51 per cent of the people, if our old friend, NORC, is right, as it has proved to be on many occasions, believe that congress depends more on its own judgment than on public opinion.

Of course, the reason for this impression is that the organized voters, the ones which some organization controls, form the congressman's judgment because they are the most vocal. They make themselves heard in person, through their membership, and the people whom they influence.

In the two recent questions I have mentioned: labor control and price control, you have two powerful lobbies at work — the unions and the industrial organizations, but pulling in opposite directions.

I am not saying that either is right or wrong in the views they express and the causes they advocate. I am saying that they are active and powerful. And also that they naturally promulgate ideas in their own interest. If these interests happen to be the public's, as well, fine. If not. . . .

Most of the congressional secretaries I know well enough to talk with frankly support this view. Except, of course, when some strange political deal is involved, whereby the congressman feels it safer to displease some of his constituency because of its indifference, than to disregard the pressure brought upon him by other forces in or out of congress.

This particular inquiry by the Quarterly showed legislators rated the various influences on them, as follows:

(1) personal mail; (2) visits TO the public; (3) newspapers; (4) visits FROM the public; and (5) public opinion polls.

The bearing which these figures have on the importance of writing your congressman, in my opinion, is this: they show that mail IS important, and that when letters at one end of the spectrum of importance jibe with the poll (at the other end), it certainly puts a burr under the legislator's vote.

People Are Buying More

Recently, I said over the air that America was eating better, and eating more than it had ever eaten before. Immediately I received a squall of stormy letters, vehemently denying my statement.

All of the writers regaled me with the same tale which my wife brings home each day — that the grocer's and the butcher's shelves are almost bare.

Nevertheless, America is eating better and more food. Americans who ate a yearly average of 127 pounds of meat before the war are now gobbling it at the rate of 150 pounds apiece. This statement is from Fortune magazine, a periodical not noted for making false statements.

You and I cannot get everything we want, but we aren't all of America by a long way. You and I have always had meat virtually every day in the week.

But millions of people in this country never had meat more than once or twice a week. These millions of people have more money today than they have ever had, but you, if you are one of the people who wrote me, probably never were conscious of that fact.

The little graph shows the facts. These figures on which it is based are compiled by the department of commerce, and the most anti-administration banker you know won't doubt them.

They show, as you see, that in 1939, the public's spendable income was 68 billion dollars. The estimate for 1946 is 139 billion.

Now your common sense will tell you that the people who ate meat every day didn't get all of that 71 billion dollar increase in their spending money. The low-income groups got a large part of it. In other words, America (as a whole) is eating more meat (and other things) than it ever did before, and because so many MORE people are eating so much MORE meat, there isn't as much left for the people who ate all they wanted before.

The discussion of how much America is eating arose in connection with the question as to our ability to help feed starving Europe and Asia. Some people believed that because they couldn't buy as many things at the store as they were accustomed to buying, America didn't have enough to spare.

But the people (you and I) who can't get all of what we want are in no danger of starving. We can get things we may not like, but which will be just as good for us. And also, we can be assured that the people, who, in America's past, have been near the danger lines, are getting a lot more than they ever had before. And they weren't starving then, either.

So don't think that we haven't enough to spare for the invisible guest.

NEWS REVIEW
Rats Cost Half-Billion a Year But New 'Rat Killers' Found; 1946 Crops Depend on Weather

NO. 1 ENEMY:
Rats Increase

The rat population of the United States shot up during the war, due to a shortage of chemicals for rodenticides, and we now have over 25 million rats. They do an annual damage of 500 million dollars to food and property, exclusive of sickness and death caused by disease they spread.

Government officials estimate that from 12½ to 15 billion pounds of grain a year are consumed or destroyed by rats on farms. Each rat eats about 100 pounds a year, and spoils at least another hundred.

Scientists of the interior department are making use of two potent rodenticides developed during the war. One is "1080," or sodium fluoracetate, said to be the most effective rat poison known. The other is "antu," an abbreviation for alphanapthylthicurea.

WEATHER:
Rains and Drouth

The government weather report shows that recent rains in the Middle West have benefited small grains, but that more sunshine and warmth was needed for best growth and development.

Crop estimates are up. One expert predicts winter wheat production this year, as of June 1, at 751 million bushels, or 8 million bushels more than the government estimated last month. Spring wheat was estimated at 268 million bushels, slightly less than the 300 million bushels in 1945.

In many places in the Mississippi valley, wet weather slowed all farm work and especially corn planting. The extremely wet spots were rare, however, and in many places rains were needed.

WAR BABIES:
May Curb Influx

The bringing of very young babies of war brides from Europe to the United States may be halted, if a recommendation of a special army board which investigated a recent outbreak of diarrhea on the transport Zebulon Vance when 30 babies were stricken and eight died.

The army may halt transportation from Europe of all babies under one year of age. More thorough physical examinations have been requested for war brides and their children at European staging areas before departing for this country. The war mothers themselves are somewhat to blame, it is reported, because of laxity of sanitary habits which might have contributed to the epidemic.

CANNED MEAT:
60% Set Aside

A new government order provides that federally inspected slaughterers may not produce canned meat for civilian consumption unless they deliver to government agencies 60 per cent of each week's total output. The order is designed to provide more canned meat for foreign relief shipments.

GRAINS:
Bet on Prices

In Chicago, those who buck the board of trade are betting that the OPA extension bill will eliminate basic commodity farm prices from control. Bidding is constantly higher on wheat, oats and rye and are going higher.

The Kansas City board of trade from time to time has prohibited all grain futures trading on the exchange except in settlement of open commitments. Purpose of the action, the directors said, was to protect traders against losses caused by the increased ceiling prices established by the federal government.

CUBAN SUGAR:
Price Pledge Given

If prices of U. S. foodstuffs imported into Cuba go up next year, the U. S. government has given that country assurance of a higher price for Cuban sugar in this country, says Oscar Siegle, president of the Cuban sugar commission.

The basic price agreed on for this year's sugar crop will continue to be 3.675 cents a pound. Siegle said. Any increase in American foodstuff prices, because of changes in the OPA, would be reflected "perforce, on the price of sugar," Siegle reported after a trip from Havana to Washington.

TO TOKYO:
New ATC Airline

The American fliers who spanned the oceans and flew the "hump" have inaugurated a new airline to Tokyo over the "top of the world," saving more than 18 hours of flying time each way. They are the pilots of the Air Transport command.

In announcing the new route for passenger and cargo planes, the ATC stated the trip will take 26 hours' flying time.

The new line will follow a one-stop route from Seattle to Tokyo by way of Adak in the Aleutian islands.

NEW USES FOUND
Demand for Potatoes Is Heavy

WASHINGTON.—With new uses for potatoes being found, along with a heavier consumer demand, is keeping the government out of the market for support purposes to a greater degree than department of agriculture officials expected, in view of the unprecedented potato shipments this spring.

One of the reasons for increased demand is the entry of the distilling industry into the buying field. Distillers are buying potatoes from the growers at prices above government support prices in order to convert into alcohol.

Potatoes were successfully used for livestock feeding in 1937, 1939, 1940 and 1941, officials pointed out, and in view of the feed shortage, may go into this channel. When processed into flour, potatoes also make an excellent poultry feed. Starch, flour and glucose are other potato products for human consumption.

Potatoes manufactured into alcohol yield about 20 per cent in by-product livestock feed.

Shipments from potato producing states have broken the all-time high of 1,514 carloads a day on four successive days this spring. California has been the heaviest shipper.

To meet the situation, the department has set up support buying offices in California, Arizona, Texas, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia. While peaks were reached last week in several states, North Carolina, California and Virginia marketings are expected to run even higher this week, with Oklahoma, Arizona and Arkansas just coming on.

Support buying at the announced price levels reached about 500 carloads last week, officials estimated, with 200 cars purchased in North Carolina alone. But the demand from all types of consumers, including distilleries, prevented the buying program from reaching the proportions such heavy marketing would normally mean. The market can normally absorb only about 1,000 carloads a day, compared with last week's daily average of 1,717 carloads.

The department will use some of its surplus for school lunch programs and relief needs, but it is apparent that the bulk will go for outside needs. Officials hope that a considerable amount will go into industrial uses other than the manufacture of alcohol, but admit that some may go to distillers

HOPE OF TOMORROW

Future Homemakers of America Membership Now over 200,000

We are the Future Homemakers of America.
We face the future with warm courage,
And high hope.
For we are the builders of homes,
Homes for America's future.
Homes where living will be the expression of everything
That is good and fair.

WRITTEN by pupil delegates at a meeting of the national executive council of the Future Homemakers of America in Chicago in the summer of 1945, the foregoing creed dramatizes the broad objectives of a booming high school home economics club already numbering over 200,000 members in 45 states and Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

High school home economics clubs are not a new idea but the Future Homemakers movement represents the first effort to co-ordinate all such activity in a central organization. Under the stimulus provided by home economics sections in state departments of education, the American Home Economics association, and home economics schools and departments in colleges, independent units have thrived for 15 years, with recognition of the unlimited possibilities offered for learning and teaching.

Designed to stimulate interest in home economics and integrate high school activities with organization work, the Future Homemakers movement evolved from plans drawn by the American home economics association and the home economics service of the U. S. office of education in 1944. Within a few months, it was accepted by the state departments of education and vocational education and the state home economics associations of a majority of states, including Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the District of Columbia.

'Toward New Horizons.'

When the pupil delegates of the Future Homemakers met in Chicago last summer they were fully prepared for formal organization of their club. Besides writing their creed and constitution, they developed policies and procedures, drew a work program for the year, decided upon red and white for their colors, the red rose for their flower, and an octagonal emblem. Fittingly, they chose "Toward New Horizons" for their motto.

National in scope, the Future Homemakers are broken down into regional districts, with state and local chapters.

Presently, Myrtle Hilton of Tiptonville, Tenn., is president; Anita Lehman of Baton Rouge, La., is vice president; Emma Jo Lewis of De Land, Fla., is recreation chairman; Joan Du Plessis of Swampscott, Mass., is secretary; Barbara Ann Boggs of Sutton, W. Va., is vice president and Marie Bresnan of East Haven, Conn., is national project chairman.

Other officers include Irene Trout of Milwaukie, Ore., treasurer; Barbara Parker of Carson City, Nev., vice president; Margaret Worlton of Lehi, Utah, public relations; Phyllis Marshall of Vermont, Ill., parliamentarian; Deania Burnworth of Independence, Kans., vice president, and Lois K. Mueller of Seymour, Wis., historian.

Wide Latitude Allowed.

While the pupil members of the Future Homemakers are permitted the widest latitude in the formulation and development of their programs, they are assisted by experienced advisers, including Edna Amidon, chief of the home economics service of the U. S. office of education; Mrs. Dora S. Lewis of the executive board of the American Homemakers association; Emily Haydock of the National Education association, and Dr. Hazel Frost.

Successful in developing a home economics club in Oklahoma several years ago, Dr. Frost, as national adviser of the Future Homemakers, has been largely credited with the phenomenal growth of the new movement. In assuming her position with the Future Homemakers in 1944, Dr. Frost applied the same principles she employed in Oklahoma in making the new organization a close working partner of home economics classes.

Though mostly composed of girls, the Future Homemakers also admit boys to membership.

ADVISER . . . Dr. Hazel Frost is national adviser of the Future Homemakers of America.

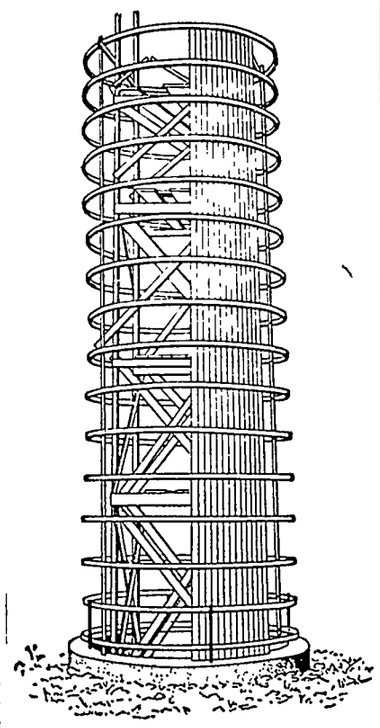
Above-Ground Farm Silo

By W. J. Dryden, WNU Farm Editor.

Availability of cash, labor and materials will largely determine the type of silo to be constructed. The farmer must decide whether durability and benefits will warrant high expenditures.

In building any above-ground silo several factors must be considered. The lumber must be well matched, free from large knots and doors fit tightly in order that the walls be airtight.

While octagonal silos are sometimes built, they are not recommended except for urgent financial reasons. The walls should be smooth and withstand considerable lateral strain without cracking or bulging. The exterior wall surfaces should be protected against weathering. The foundations must be large enough with sufficient strength to support the load and avoid uneven settlement and cracking. Silos must be built on well-drained locations.

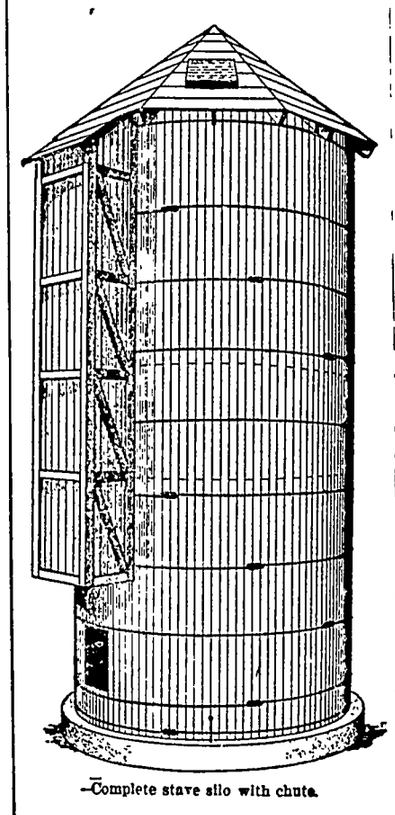


A chute to facilitate feeding and a safe ladder should be included.

As silage should be removed at the rate of 2 to 3 inches a day, the diameter will depend upon the quantity of silage to be fed daily. The height of the silo should not be less than twice nor more than three and one-half times the diameter.

Foundations will only stand up well if they extend below the frost line and are erected on well-drained soil. In cold climates it is well to extend four or five feet below the surface; in the warmer climates, two feet will be sufficient.

Reinforcement of silos is important in order to withstand the pressures exerted by the silage and by high winds. The amount of reinforcing needed depends on the size of the silo and the crop stored. Tests made by the USDA gave an average horizontal pressure of 11 pounds per square foot per foot of depth of corn silage, which is too low for silage of sunflower, pea vine, hay and molasses, or very high-moisture corn.

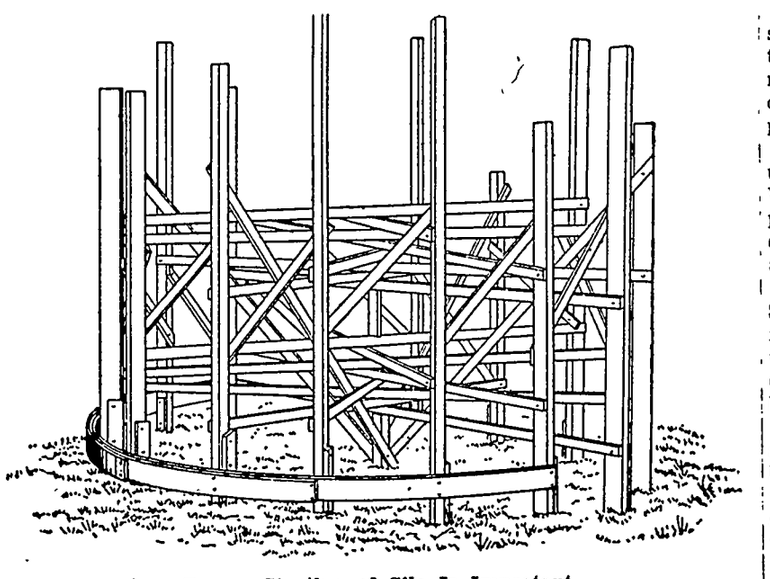


—Complete stave silo with chute.

While a roof is not essential, it is desirable. It adds to the stability, appearance and life of the silo, retards freezing, reduces spoilage by keeping rain and snow out, discourages birds from feeding on the silage and makes the work of removing more agreeable.

A trap door in the roof will admit the silage carrier or blower pipe. The filling door should be easily accessible from the ladder or chute. Gambrel, dome and half-pitch roofs are most economical of space and provide more headroom for maximum filling. In most locations it is advisable to provide lightning protection.

The type of material, whether lumber, plywood, concrete, cement blocks, bricks or metal will depend upon available supply, amount of money to be invested and local materials available.



Proper Starting of Silo Is Important.

JESUS' FRIENDS CARRY ON HIS WORK

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:15, 16, 19, 20; Luke 24:45-49; Acts 2:46, 47; 5:42.

MEMORY SELECTION—Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

Friendship brings results. We respond to it with our own interest, and by our desire to bring others into its helpful circle of influence. Obviously, the man who knows the friendship of Jesus wants others to meet his Friend and know his love and power.

The disciples had seen the risen Lord, a privilege which carried with it the responsibility of declaring the good news of completed redemption to all the nations of the earth.

We find them engaged in

I. Blessed Preaching (Mark 16: 15, 16, 19, 20).

The call and commission of the Lord before he was caught up into heaven was clear and definite. How glad we are that the disciples obeyed, went and preached, and had such blessed results.

The response of these early Christians was immediate and enthusiastic. Would that such a spirit had characterized the church through all the generations since then, and if it had, the commission would long since have been carried out. It has been estimated that if everyone in a church of two thousand were to win one soul a year, and each convert win one soul each year, the world would be evangelized in less than thirty-five years. Why not?

But while on the whole the church has failed, there have been valiant souls all down through its history who have given themselves to the business of preaching the gospel. With them, as with these of the first century, the secret is ever, "The Lord working with them."

II. Powerful Witnessing (Luke 24: 45-49).

The death and resurrection of Christ made possible the preaching of repentance and remission of sins, the message of redemption which was to go out to all nations through the disciples.

They were witnesses of these things, they spoke that which they knew and had experienced, and so their word carried weight and conviction. That, however, was not the secret of the success of their efforts; there was something more.

It is never enough for a man to speak of the things of God, no matter how brilliant and eloquent he may be, nor how certain he may be of his facts. He must have the power of God.

The early believers were to tarry until they received the Holy Spirit. We need only yield to him for he is present with every believer—the indwelling One—ready to empower and use us.

We need a real revival of the Holy Spirit power in the church, and we need it now. If the church as a whole will not yield to God, let us do so as individuals that we may be witnesses with power.

God is looking for men. He has always honored those who in faith have obeyed his command. The whole history of church and missionary endeavor bears eloquent testimony to that fact.

III. Glad Soul-Winning (Acts 2:46, 47; 5:42).

There are a number of things in this passage. There is the fine fellowship of the believers in the early church. We also note that they were regular in their attendance at the temple. They preached and taught both in the temple and at home. But the significant thing which we wish to note now is that it all resulted in the salvation of souls.

The Lord added to the church "day by day those that were saved," for such is the proper reading of verse 47. Day by day souls were won for Christ and added to the church. Why do we not have more churches of that kind today?

The church, which is so much the center of life for Christians, is not as well understood as it should be. We have come to regard it as just one organization among many competing for the attention and interest of men, when it is really a divine, living organism established by Christ as his body and representing him in this world.

The church is made up of those who are saved (v. 47), those who have received the word by faith and witnessed a good confession of their faith in Christ (v. 41). This is a fact to be remembered in a time when there is so much laxness in receiving members into the church. It is not a religious or social club. It is not a rallying place for those who wish to work for some economic, political, or social project. It is not a gathering of good people who wish to share common interests.

The church needs to cleanse its rolls of all unbelievers, all hangers-on, and to get back to the purity which it had when only those were received who were manifestly "added" by the Lord (v. 47).

Spool Shelves for Interesting Trinkets

THESE graceful corner shelves are 10 inches wide and 7 inches deep at the bottom. Just the right size to hold the quaint match holder, the old-fashioned china doll head and other interesting trinkets that you have been treasuring. In Victorian times such shelves were strung together with cord and the spools saved from the voluminous amount of sewing done each season. Today, with spools piling up from our sewing, we make similar shelves that have all the old charm but are much more rigid and substantial.

The spools and shelves now may be practically welded together with new easy-to-use types of glue. The wire or cord is then run through, as shown here, so that the shelves may be hung in a corner ready to hold articles of considerable weight.

NOTE—Mrs. Spears has designed an actual-size pattern for these three gracefully curved corner shelves which are graduated in size. This pattern also contains complete directions for cutting and joining these shelves as well as a pattern for another larger set of spool shelves. Ask for Pattern No. 255. Address:

TRUCK BURNED

When Charles Devitts, Jr., of Lohrville, saw flames crawling around the side of the cab of his truck, he lost no time in pushing out his 11 year old passenger, and then jumping to safety. The truck was loaded with 800 gallons of gasoline, all of which went up in flames.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Since there isn't much doing here in the Squadron over noon hour, I thought I'd drop a few lines your way and see how Dear Old Klemme is making it by now. Suppose there is a lot of farm work going on and most of the guys are home from around Klemme. Would sure like to be back myself but guess the Navy has other plans for me for a few months.

I left the states on May 19 and flew over here with our own plane by way of Westover, Mass., Nova Scotia, Argentia, Newfoundland, Azores Island and then to Port Lyaute, French Morocco where I'm with Patrol Bombing Squadron 114. I'm located approximately 90 miles north of Casabanca, French Morocco on the coast of North Africa. The land around here reminds me very much of Iowa because it is level until it gets further inland where we hit the mountains.

We expect to do quite a bit of extended flights around here meaning to Italy, Spain and France. So far I have had the opportunity to go to the town of Fes, French Morocco which is a little over 100 miles from here. It is a very old town and the streets are not more than 8 or 9 feet wide. It is a very dirty place but when we visited one Arabian home I was very much surprised because it was very clean inside and the ceilings are at least 40 feet high and everything is inlaid with tile. The one we visited was over 4000 years old and very beautiful on the inside. Practically everything over here is made by hand such as their material, cooking utensils and things like that. It was really very interesting and amazing and I enjoyed it very much. We also visited Casablanca, which is a little above average for cleanliness around here but the people are very poor and begging all the time especially the Arabs. They have what they call MADENA or the Market Place where you can buy or trade their goods but they always make sure they get the better end af the bargain

We also flew up to Algiers, taking some high ranking Naval officers with us. I never had the chance to visit the town itself so there really isn't much to tell about that but we did see the original "Cas-Bah" from the air, a lot of movies are made from that setting.

The climate here isn't so bad, but the hotter season is yet to come and I hear that it really gets warm. Right now I would say that it's about the same as we have in Iowa about the middle of July or August.

I have received no copies of the Times but the mail situation here is few and far between. I guess that is about all for now, and I would appreciate it if you would send me the addresses of Jesse Schwichtenberg, Bill Grosshuesch and Wesly Suckow as well as all the rest of the fellows around Klemme that aren't out yet.

Tell Klemme hello for me and I would liked to have attended the K.H.S. Alumni Banquet. I would appreciate a letter from anyone who would care to write and I will try my best to answer it promptly. Guess that is about all for this time.

Sincerely Yours,
Don Schaefer USN

Bloat Is Problem Now With Cattle

Iowa farmers are again being warned to be on the lookout for bloat if they have livestock grazing on pastures where clover makes up a big part of the mixture.

Dwight Espe, Iowa State College dairyman, says the bloat trouble does not seem to be bad this year as it was last, but a number of cases of livestock losses due to bloat have been reported over the state.

Most of the losses, Espe says, could be avoided by careful handling of the stock on pasture.

Eat Too Fast

"There is bloat trouble," he says, "because excellent pasture weather this spring and early summer has been ideal for clover. In many fields it has outgrown the bluegrass or other grasses it is seeded with.

"There's nothing in the clover that causes bloat. The animals simply eat it too fast. They get a big bunch of clover in their paunches, and the normal digestive process produces gas which pushes this bunch of clover against the paunch opening. The gas can't escape and bloat results.

Prevention Procedure

The number one rule in handling livestock on clover pasture is to keep the livestock in dry-lot until the dew goes off the pasture in the morning and to take them off before the dew comes on at night. The same procedure should be followed in keeping the stock off the pasture after a rain.

Espe says feeding some dry hay or some grain feed will help keep livestock from eating too much clover when they are first turned out. Little help can be expected from feeding salt or minerals to prevent bloat.

If an animal shows signs of bloat, it should be kept moving and a veterinarian called. Getting the animal to drink some cold water or pouring cold water over the side of the animal also seems to help slow the digestive process which produces the gas.

MISTAKE TO CUT OATS TOO EARLY

Newer Varieties Need to Be Riper Than Ones Grown In Former Years

With the nation gripped by an acute feed shortage, farmers are urged to resist the temptation of cutting their oats too early, especially now that new varieties are being grown almost exclusively.

E. S. Dyas, Iowa State College argronomist, points out that harvesting these new variety oats before they are completely matured will lead to certain spoilage and loss of valuable feed.

Old Varieties Rusted

Dyas says the new oats are deceptive. When the heads appear mature and ready to cut there still is more moisture in the stems than was true in the case of the old varieties. The reason is that most old varieties are susceptible to rust. The stems actually died and dried before the grain was filled and mature.

Then, too, the new oats are heavier, Dyas says. They pack down more in the bin. And because they have a lower percentage of hulls they spoil faster than light oats which have a high hull content.

Get Moisture Test

Oats that are to be cut with a binder should be left standing until the stems are yellow and dry. This stage is reached from 5 days to a week after the heads look mature enough to cut on the old varieties.

When oats are to be combined, the best procedu wait until the stem enough for the combin dle satisfactorily B any large amount o run into the bin, Dy mends having a moi made. This usually ca at the local elevator office. If the moistur runs above 14 percent variety oats should n into the bin.

WE ENCOURAGE increased dairy output

Milking Cows just naturally goes with good farming. It's good for the farmer, because milk-and-c checks provide regular cash income. It's good for farm, because cows help maintain fertility.

Right now, with the greatly increased demand for milk and other dairy foods, many farmers are adding good cows to their herds.

GARDEN TALKS

June is a critical month in the battle against weeds. Every weed is a "saboteur" stealing soil nutrients, moisture and living space from the vegetables. Many weeds serve as supply bases for pests which attack vegetables. Since weeds grow much faster during warm weather, it's necessary to cultivate about once a week for a while to prevent weeds from getting a head start.

By the time the vegetables are large enough to shade the ground, the weeds aren't likely to be such a problem. It is important not to cultivate more than an inch deep. Vegetables roots will be injured if cultivation is deeper.

While plants are wet is a poor time to work in the garden. Doing so may spread disease. Rust disease in beans is one example.

It is good economy to remove and burn plants appearing diseased. Tomato plants showing stringy, fern-like leaves near the top are virused and should be removed.

Blackleg a bacterial disease, has been showing up in potato plants. The evidence of the disease may be seen when the upper leaves of one or more shoots on a plant start to roll up. The deep green color of such plants will gradually fade to a yellowish color. The plant gradually dies. The base plant will be rotted and inky black.

Nothing can be done with plants diseased by this organism. The only known control is to plant seed produced in disease free fields.

The latest method for controlling potato insect pests in home gardens is to dust with 3-percent DDT in talc. Production of potatoes is likely to be increased by dusting every 10 to 14 days until the tubers are matured. It is important to get the poison underneath the potato leaves where the leaf hoppers work. To do this, use a duster or sprayer with a curved nozzle.

* * *

Keep dusting cucumbers and other vine crops to discourage the attacks of cucumber beetles. Dust must be kept on the plants continuously until the first fruits have set. The home gardener can make a dust mixture composed of 1 part calcium arsenate of lead or arsenate and 15 parts dusting gypsum usually can be obtained at lumber yards. A dust containing 1 percent rotenone may be used instead.

Your Coal Supply

It is extremely important that you place your order NOW for next Winter's Fuel.

The loss of 45 days working time this year, and 30 days last year due to strikes, represents a shortage of more than 10 million tons of coal which never will be recovered.

This condition has created a serious problem for the operators of railroads and coal dealers to supply the coal needs of the nation.

We are anxious to avoid any undue inconvenience for our customers this winter, therefore, we urge you to place your order NOW, and arrange to take the coal when it arrives.

We will deliver orders in the order they are received. Protect yourself by getting your order in without delay!

FISHING BY RADIO

Sonar, the sound-detecting device developed in the war, is being used by fishermen to locate fish. We will now hear of "the big one that faded away."

Sardine fishermen are already using the device and hope to increase their catches greatly. Any instrument that can locate sardines should be terrific when after swordfish.

Different fish make different sounds. These will be tabulated so fishermen may know which fish is broadcasting.

We can imagine the fishing trip of tomorrow:

A couple of fellows, Joe and Gus, climb into the leaky rowboat equipped with a sonar set and pull for the fishing grounds. They heave the anchor and tune in for prospects. . . .

"Hear anything?" asks Joe.

"Yes, there are fish all around, but they are not coming through clearly," says Gus.

"Sounds like a school of blowfish," says Gus a minute later as he hears a terrific disturbance.

"Naw," puts in Joe as he too tunes in. "It's just another one of those radio breakfast table chats."

"No matter where you go you can't get away from those programs," sighs Gus.

Now Joe registers excitement and fidgets with the dials.

"Ooofle . . . glub-glub . . . arf . . . bozzle-wozzle . . . irk!" comes a sound from the deep

"Codfish?" asks Gus.

"Nope. Just a congressional debate. I can't seem to tune out those land programs and get into deep water."

"Stick to congress and you'll be in deep water enough," moans Gus.

"Wurf-f-f-f . . . gozz-goss . . . bwilch-h-h . . . gazink-k-k-k. Br-r-r," comes over the sonar set.

"Seabass!" says Gus

"How can you tell?" asks Joe.

"I've got a code book."

Presently some very loud noises seem to indicate a school of big fish broadcasting. But all they catch is a small eel.

"How do you explain a thing like that?" asks Joe.

"Something wrong with my batteries," says Gus.

And so on. Until at the close of day they get something fairly big. As they haul it into the boat the fish gives vent to a most annoying series of grunts and groans.

"I knew it," exclaims Gus. "It's a commercial!"

An "Eat More Potatoes" drive is on with special attention to public eating places. Well, a first step could be a little effort to solve the mystery of why so many eating places seem never to have heard that there is any other way to cook a potato except as french fries. Try to get a baked or boiled one, without influence.

Plain Talk on Idiots

No matter what you may think of his stand on other matters, Harry Truman is right about automobile drivers. The only thing that puzzles us is his candor and toughness on this point.

It must be that he thinks all the crazy auto operators are Republican anyhow.

The President says that we are not only permitting nuts, morons and crazy people to drive automobiles on the streets of America, but making it easy for them. That's an understatement.

THE UNION AT THE BAT

'Twas a balmy day in summer
With a double-header planned—
But to one game they had cut it
On the union's late demand;
Early had the ball fans gathered,
But the game was slow to start
Due to technical proceedings
On an organizer's part.

Now the battle seemed impending—
Fans sat ready to enthuse
Till a further stay resulted
From some unpaid union dues;
Then a checkoff was demanded,
And the bleachers took it hard
When three pitchers were excluded
As they had no union card!

CAN YOU REMEMBER—

Away back when, whatever might happen at breakfast, it would never wind up as a radio broadcast?

• • •

America is now to get bread made from potatoes. We await the fellow who will ask to have a roll french fried.

We understand that Chester Bowles hopes that whatever the critics say of his new book they will not say "there is meat in it."

Prefab Houses Built in 1850

HAMILTON, MO. — Prefabricated houses are nearly 100 years old in Missouri, for this town of 1,600 population built them back in the 1850s.

There were no carpenters in Hamilton, so A. G. Davis sent plans for a two-story house to a St. Louis firm. He received the lumber, windows and doors with holes already bored for wooden pegs — since there were no nails available. Complete instructions for assembling the house were furnished. A few years later, Otis Richardson did likewise.

The Richardson house is still in good shape. It has been remodeled and is in use.

Half of Topsoil Has Washed Away

BECKLEY, W. VA.—More than 50 per cent of the original top soil on West Virginia land has been washed away, according to Walter C. Grumbel, a soil conservationist.

"Where soil conservation methods have been practiced," Gumbel said, "crop yields have increased anywhere from 10 to 25 per cent."

He said an intelligent conservation program would protect and stabilize the land and water supply, restore plant food, increase farm income, prevent floods and restore forests and wild life.

Man Really Builds 'Better Mouse Trap'

BAMBERG, S. C. — S. D. Bishop has finally built that "better" mousetrap and may have a path beaten to his door. But it was entirely accidental.

What Bishop was really making was a fish trap. He left it overnight at the feed store where he is employed, baited and ready for a try-out.

Next morning he found five rats in the trap—and within a few days he caught 19 more.

Ex-GI Gives Anti-Snorer To the Army

BEAVERTON, ORE. — T. M. Weed, local lawyer, who used to be a G.I. and knows what snoring sounds like in a barracks, has submitted his "no-snore kit" to the U. S. quartermaster corps.

He claims snoring can be stopped or greatly reduced by a specially constructed device designed to prevent the fluttering action of the soft palate and uvula that causes the coarse, low-pitched irritating noise made by a sleeping person.

Weed admits that it was the complaints of his barracks mates in 1942 and 1943 that spurred him to devise an anti-snore device. He used it for the other two years he was in the army—and made friends!

More Crop Dusting

Peanuts may be dusted from airplanes in the near future. Tests carried on at the Omega plant farms at Omega, Ga., first of the kind in that section, proved that plant dusting from the air not only costs about one-half as much as dusting or spraying from tractors but is much more efficient, since a single plane can dust 1,000 acres per day.

Because of this and also because of the fact that the Genesee valley canal terminated at Millgrove instead of Olean, the project was forced to be abandoned.

Thus Allegany never became the hub of "communication, transportation and industry" for the East. But it nearly became a reality.

G.I. SIDEWALK ASSOCIATION . . . When the chamber of commerce of Port Arthur, Texas, discovered a large body of unemployed veterans idle and seeking work, it moved to not only employ them but also beautify the city. The ex-G.I.s were formed into a concrete sidewalk laying association. In two weeks a pent-up demand for walks resulted in orders being signed for over 18,000 square feet. The veterans are making up to $12 a day at standard price of 35 cents per square foot.

THE GREAT CRONIN—PINT SIZED EDITION . . . Being the son of Joe Cronin, manager of the Boston Red Sox (most highly paid big league skipper) carries some weight in the city of the bean and the cod. Corky Cronin, 5, kneels on one knee "just like pop," and lays down the modus operandi for a coming game to the "Lake Avenue Wildcats." His team doesn't seem to be taking young Cronin too seriously.

SPEED WINNER . . A big victory smile shines through grease, grime and sweat as George Robson, Maywood, Calif., is congratulated as winner of 30th annual 500-mile speedway classic at Indianapolis, by his wife, mechanics and friends. Robson was a prewar contender but hard luck usually worked against him. His winning of the first postwar classic places him as the outstanding racing driver of the age.

PRODIGY OF SCIENCE . . . Dr. Linus Pauling, California Institute of Technology, who has been awarded the Willard Gibbs medal by Chicago section of American Chemical society. At age of 30, in 1931, he was hailed as a "prodigy of American science." Native of Portland, Ore., he is one of world's leading theoretical chemists. He is a graduate of Oregon State college.

BURCH SUCCEEDS LATE SENATOR GLASS . . . Thomas Granville Burch, 77, Democratic representative of Virginia, who has been appointed to complete the term of the late Carter Glass in the United States senate. Left to right: Sen. Kenneth McKellar, Tenn., president pro tempore of the senate, who administered the oath; Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Virginia, and Senator Burch as he assumed his new duties. He says he will not run for re-election.

Household Hints

Small bottles with a combination screw cap and medicine dropper are convenient for storing small amounts of household oil near appliances that require regular oiling.

Patches that press on may be used for mending weak spots in the feet of hose. Mend before the weak spot wears through to make certain patch does not show.

Should Junior lose the checkers, take your old broom handle and saw it into quarter-inch slices. Paint half the slices red, half black. Make excellent substitutes. Even Junior will be happy now.

To save back-tiring stooping, use a long-handled dust pan. If you can't find one in the stores, have pop fashion one from an old mop handle and attach to your present dustpan.

If you don't like your cabbage heads bursting, stop them. When a cabbage has grown so large there's danger of its bursting, pull the entire plant until about half the roots are broken; that is, loosen it in the ground and leave it. It won't have so many roots to take water (so won't burst), but it will stand until ready to use without wilting.

When placing gelatin in a long flat dish, put a strip of waxed paper across the dish each way before pouring in the gelatine, and it will be easier to remove.

If the rubber covering wears off near the end of the electric cord, cut the cord off and reconnect it.

To keep macaroni or spaghetti from boiling over, add a tablespoon of cooking oil or shortening to the water.

In some of the areas where hail ruined gardens recently, all is not lost. Lots of vegetables can be planted and produced in damaged gardens. Peas, lettuce and such cool-loving crops are not adapted for planting now. But tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, snap beans, bush limas, cabbage, cucumbers, corn, beets and carrots all can be planted.

Plant lice attack so many vegetables it pays to check garden plants closely and often. Especially observe the tender shoots and underneath leaves. If you find any of the softbodied, slow-moving creatures, apply a contact poison immediatly before they can reproduce. Dissolve a teaspoon of nicotine sulphate plus 1 ounce of soap in a gallon of water. Vegetables such as broccoli should be dusted with rotenone.

* * *

Weeds are a problem in asparagus bed. A wheel hoe may be used on very small beds, but large plantings can be disked and harrowed at the time of the last harvest. Fertilize the plants now, and continue to cultivate through the season. Rhubarb also should be cultivated to encourage strong growth. Attention to these points insures strong and productive plants next season. Asparagus is likely to do better if lime is applied to acid.

* * *

On many garden soils, a little lime scratched in around cabbage and broccoli plants is helpful. Members of the cabbage family like a neutral to slightly sweet soil. Most vegetables, however, prefer a slightly acid soil, so it would not be advisable to apply lime to other vegetables unless a soil test shows to be strongly acid.

* * *

Potatoes start to form at the time of blossoming. If lots of food is to be stored in the tubers from the leaves, then gardeners must protect those leaves from pests. The leaves should be kept green and healthy until the potatoes are mature. The best way to do this is to dust every 10 days with 3 percent DDT in sulfur. But be sure to get some dust underneath the leaves and not pile it all on top.

* * *

Keep dusting or spraying in your garden, because those black flea beetles are persistent foes who chew small "gunshot" holes in leaves. Dust most of the attacked vegestables regularly with a mixture of 1 part lead or calcium arsenate and 10 parts dusting sulfur. Use 3 percent DDT in sulfur to dust potatoes. The same dust may be used on beans until the pods start to set. Those who prefer spraying can use the commercial dry bordeaux. Make a gallon of the bordeaux and add 1 tablespoon of calcium arsenate to the gallon of bordeaux.

Feed tomatoes after they have been planted for at least a month or by the time the small fruits have set. A complete chemical garden fertilizer should be used. Apply a small handful to each plant. Sprinkle the fertilizer in a broad band. Keep several inches away from the stem. Scratch the fertilizer in slightly and if possible water it down. Vigorously growing tomato plants will withstand the ravages of leaf spot disease or "blight" as many gardeners call it.

Training tomato plants to one stem will produce earlier and larger fruits for slicing. But fewer fruits per plant will result. Another disadvantage is that pruned tomatoes are likely to result in loss of fruit as a result of sunscald.

Unpruned plants will produce more fruits. And since they have more foliage there is not likely to be as much loss of fruit through sunscald.

Mulch tomatoes shortly after they have been fertilized with a complete chemical garden fertilizer. Dried grass or straw may be used to place around the plants to a depth of several inches. Many gardeners pull up their pea vines as soon as most of the pods are picked and spread the vines around the tomatoes. Mulching pays, because it keeps down weeds, keeps the ground cooler and keeps the ground moist. Blossom rot of the fruits is thus kept down.

* * *

Keep planting. Gardeners who keep planting up until the last of August can help reduce critical famine situation. Small seed lima beans, such as Henderson bush, may still be planted within the next week or so. Bush snap beans may be planted until early July. Small successive plantings of sweet corn should be made up until July 15th. Use an early maturing variety, such as Marcross, for the last planting. It is not too late to plant tomatoes, eggplants, peppers and cabbage. Lots of vegetables can be produced by starting to plant now.

Curing the vines is a critical operation. When most of the pods lose their green color and become papery, it is best to cure them, with plenty of air, home gardener to harvest and under cover to prevent molding.

All beans — including navy beans, bush snap beans, pole beans, soybeans and lima beans can be used for dry mature beans. If it is not possible to harvest all the pole beans, snap beans and the like for canning, there is no need to let them go to waste. Just let the plants mature in the pod. The pods of the vegetable varieties scatter their seeds more easily than do field varieties, however. So it is especially important to harvest them as soon as the plants mature.

If you have planted sweet potatoes, you may pull up the running vines to discourage too early a rooting along their length. This may be done during the first two cultivations. Later they may be allowed to develop. Under no circumstances should sweet potato vines be pruned.

* * *

Squashes and pumpkins are difficult for many gardeners to grow, because of damage done by the squash vine borer. Cucumbers and melons sometimes may be attacked by this borer, but squashes and pumpkins are most susceptible. Large, apparently healthy looking vines sometimes suddenly wilt down, and one will find signs of the borer on the stem where it emerges from the ground. The gardener must be continuously on the lookout for this pest.

Summer garden planting is now in season. Early vegetables should be pulled, because such "boarders" don't earn their keep. Spent pea vines should be used to mulch tomatoes.

Summer plantings should include cabbage for winter storage, tomatoes for late fruits and the late planting of cucumbers. Carrots, beets, bush snap beans and early-maturing sweet corn varieties also should be planted now.

Growing a successful summer garden calls for a somewhat different procedure than spring planting. Make seed furrows deeper than for spring planting. Fill the furrows with water and then sow the seed in the mud and cover with dry soil or peat.

Protect plantings by covering with boards, grass clippings or peat. Boards must be removed, however, as soon as the seedlings break ground. Regular cultivation and frequent watering also are in order.

Chinese cabbage can be grown successfully by planting after the middle of July. It makes a delicious salad vegetable for fall and winter use. It is frost resistant and is not bothered by many of the diseases which attack common cabbage.

Many unsupecting gardeners will have potato production cut if late blight disease strikes. Late blight can take a patch in a short time. Cool, moist conditions favor development of the disease.

To be on the safe side, potato plants should be sprayed every 10 days. Four tablespoons of commercial dry bordeaux mixture dissolved in a gallon of water is a recommended solution.. Leaves should be coated underneath as well as on top.

Gardeners who are growing cauliflower this year should gather and tie the large outer leaves together when the heads are about 3 inches across. keeping out the light produces nice white heads.

Cauliflower should be harvested while the heads are tight. After heads start to spread they become ricey.

If pastures are infested with weeds, take the cows off the grass at least two or three days before milking time. Cows grazing on weed-infested pastures are likely to give flavored, low-quality milk.

FOOD SUPPLIES TO STAY ABOUT SAME

With the favorable crop outlook, food experts estimate that over-all food supplies for home use will be about the same this year as last.

The food outlook for the next 12 months—until July, 1947—has been prepared by government agricultural workers. They say canned fruit juices and whole fruit, canned vegetable juices are among the foods that promise to be more plentiful.

Less Meat, Eggs

But there will be less meat, poultry and eggs than during the past 12 months. Wheat products also will be harder to obtain.

The outlook is based upon expected production minus what the government will need for military purposes and foreign shipments.

Iowa farmers may expect continued high prices for nearly all major farm products because of the continued high demand in the face of tight supplies.

While the government expects to take less than half as much meat the remainder of this year and next year, total available supply for civilians will be less because of lower meat production. Total production is expected to be about 21 billion pounds which is 9 percent less than last year.

Butter Production

Nearly all of the butter production during the remainder of the year will go to civilians, but 120 million pounds of cheddar type cheese will be purchased for UNRRA and military agencies.

Egg production next year is expected to be from 4 to 8 percent less than last, while poultry meat production will fall as much as 12 percent. Military agencies still require considerable quantities of poultry and turkey meat as well as eggs. Foreign needs for these products have not been determined.

Mrs. Lena Reusch of Michigan was unable to attend but sent her greetings, as she was having a family reunion at her home in South Haven, Michigan on the same day,, as this June 27 commemorates Christain Lau's return from Civil War.

A report was given of the Lau boys in the Armed Forces of which 10 are in service at the present time. Lightning Bolt Struck Creamery Chimney

The electric storm which struck Klemme early Friday morning damaged the tall chimney at the Creamery which was struck by a bolt of lightning near the top, tearing away a lot of brick and cracking the chimney. A large section will have to be re-built.

Lightning also struck a tree at the Daisy Lemke home the same morning.

CAPITOL LOBBYING AT ALL-TIME HIGH

French Dampen Nazi Hopes For Rebirth as Red Check

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

The ghost of Adolph Hitler, reported to have been executing a little clog dance of joy on Europe's political rubble heap, like the one he performed after signing the armistice, of defeated France, is probably not quite so cheerful today.

Baukhage

His prediction of chaos or communism in Europe, a wishful "apres mois le deluge," hit a setback for the second time when the sturdy, middle-of-the-road Frenchman got behind the middle-of-the-road Republican Catholic party, and defeated the Communists, just as an earlier vote killed the constitution which the Reds wanted.

Because Hitler knew his greatest hope for a Nazi rebirth was a Communistic Germany, his spirit probably rejoiced when the iron curtain went down on Germany's eastern frontiers, and one of Russia's border countries after another were bulldozed into one-party, leftist-front rule.

With France turned Communist, Germany would be an island in a red sea, and would soon have to take on protective coloring, it was assumed. The next step, according to Hitler's hope, was the reaction to Naziism.

Now, for the first time since V-E Day, France seems to have shaken off her carmine shackles. Before the recent election, some quarters were predicting that if the French middle class and peasants could not get rid of the left-wing domination with ballots, they would try it with bullets. The left-wingers themselves were warning of a reactionary revolution, and as late as the spring of this year dire warnings were being sounded.

Donald B. Robinson, former civil affairs officer in France, wrote in the April Mercury magazine that: "In no nation of northwestern Europe are there such distrust and loathing between classes and groups as in France today. The bitter dissention which has driven General de Gaulle into retirement, and constantly threatens the precarious equilibrium maintained by the left coalition, is rooted in implacable hate between the moderates, centrists and rightists on the one hand and the Communists on the other. . . ."

This situation complicated the Allies' problems in regard to Germany. However, with France now staggering to her feet, there is a chance for more harmony among the western Allies, and it is possible that Germany, with proper controls and minus a huge slice of the rich mineral land of the Saar in French hands, may have her three zones sufficiently united to begin to support herself; to start to pay some of her bills with the consumer goods that her neighbor nations want from her, and can't get anywhere else.

The results of the French elections are particularly gratifying from the standpoint of the western Allies because they appear to have established a degree of harmony among the more conservative French elements without revealing a reactionary trend.

MRP Seeks Unity Against Class War

The triumphant Popular Republican movement (MRP) had a platform which, according to French authorities, went beyond the political field to take a moral stand. The platform stressed the need for reenforcing unity among the newcomers (the right wing elements of the Socialist party made up of members of the old resistance), and all those opposing the efforts (by the Communists) to incite class hatred.

At the same time, the MRP disavowed all connection with the Radical Socialists, who, despite their name, are considered too conservative by many members of the resistance who formerly had joined in a common front with the Communists.

The election results may mean a change in Russian policy, for in spite of themselves, the western Allies have been forced to take unified action if an action at all was to be taken. It is possible that Russia was merely stalling, hoping to establish her influence in Europe, including France. Now that this strategy has failed in regard to France, she may be more cooperative. Either that . . . or resign herself to taking an Allied western bloc and liking it.

Lobbyists Fill 14 Columns

The lobby barometer of the present congress has run up a pressure record this session which is probably an all-time high. Never in the history of the capital have there been more pressure groups operating, as the listings under "associations" in the classified section of the Washington telephone directory testify.

The "associations" fill 14 columns and very few are not interested in some kind of legislation, pending or prospective, and interested enough to have an office in the capital or at least a telephone number. There are a lot more with offices under the hats of their representatives, which prefer to remain anonymous to the public.

Alphabetically speaking, the American Automobile association leads the list, and the Zionists and George Zook conclude it.

One newcomer has nudged itself right up to second place—the Amvets, one of the 26 veterans organizations listed, including the American Legion and the Buck Privates association as examples of the old and the new.

Alcoholics Anonymous appear, not so anonymous this time. There is the Association of University Professors, and right next door, the University Women, which makes it congenial. There are bakers, bankers, members of the bar, and (no relation) bottlers of carbonated beverages.

The "antis" are present—four of them: Anti-Cigarette alliance; Anti-Defamation league; Anti-Poll Tax committee; and, of course, the Anti-Saloon league, to balance the Liquor dealers and the Distillers institute further on down the page.

Certain happier combinations suggest themselves. Take the National Caterers and Sandwich Makers association and the Mayonnaise and Salad Dressing manufacturers who together symbolize a fine old American institution.

There is specialization in lobbying, too. Don't think the National Association of Ornamental Nonferrous Metals manufacturers lets the National Association of Ornamental Metal manufacturers tend to their special needs.

And when it comes to boxes, you cannot put them all in one pile either. The weatherproof, corrugated variety, the weatherpoof fiber containers and the plain fiber boxers, each hoe their own row, not to mention (though you had better, if you are a congressman, unless you want to fill one of their products) the ordinary National Wooden Box association.

Park Visitors Greater Than Officials Expected

U. S. PARKS: Visitors Increase

Americans are going to take vacations this year in such numbers that the national park service may have to revise its 1946 travel estimate upward, Director Newton B. Drury of Chicago observes. In March this year, 1,269,064 persons visited national parks and monuments, as compared with 664,442 in March, 1941. In April, park visitors were more than double a year ago.

Statistics for the first seven months indicate that the early estimate of 25,000,000 visitors this year may be entirely too low, although it is 4,000,000 above the record-breaking season of 1941. The park season is figured from October to October.

FLOUR MILLS: Grinding Slowly

Flour mills in the U. S. except those in the Southwest, will not be able to grind their normal or full amount during the month of June, due to the scarcity of wheat supplies, the Millers' National federation has declared.

Many mills in the Kansas City area are closed down, and soft wheat grinds on the Pacific coast and in the Middle West are as much as 50 per cent below normal. Texas and Oklahoma mills, located in the heart of the new crop, are operating about 75 per cent total capacity.

AUTOS: For Disabled

The Chevrolet division, General Motors, has reported that special driving equipment for physically disabled persons soon will be available in all models. This will include installation of vacuum-controlled, hand-operated brakes, clutches, throttles, starters and dimming switches which will make operation possible without the use of feet.

None of the usual foot-driving equipment will be removed, however, allowing operation in the normal manner. Other manufacturers have similar projects on the way.

APPLES: Higher Prices

In Washington, the OPA has allowed new maximum prices for apples from the beginning of the 1946 season through October 31 to allow for increased production and packing costs. The order was made effective June 12.

SPRING WIRE: Holds Up Autos

Why can't you get that new car? The National Automobile Dealers' association lists a number of reasons, including coil springs. Worst of material shortages is hard-drawn high-carbon spring wire used in the construction of upholstered seat cushions and backs. It was this shortage which caused several plants to curtail production for several days.

Many of the limited number of passenger cars now being delivered are coming off assembly lines without bumpers. Auto manufacturers estimate they will not reach normal production volume until the end of 1946.

OATS CROP: Loan Program

The department of agriculture has announced that the 1946 crop oats loan program will have an average national loan rate of 53 cents a bushel, reflecting 75 per cent parity as of February 15, similar to the 1945 program.

Only oats grading No. 3 or better will be eligible. Grain grading weevily, smutty, ergotty, garlicky, or containing more than 14.5 moisture is excluded.

AVOID ACCIDENTS

Farm Safety Week July 21 to 27

By EDWARD EMERINE
WNU Features

Annual "Farm Safety Week" will be observed this year during the week of July 21 to July 27, the National Safety council has announced. And to me it seems like one of the best ideas yet advanced and one that should be stressed in every rural community.

It was my mother who used to say: "Be careful, son." Sometimes I thought she stressed her warning too often. But maybe she didn't, for I lived 20 safe and sound years on a Colorado ranch without an accident. Other lads were not so fortunate.

There was a neighbor who lost his hand in a threshing machine. A cousin of mine had his foot mangled by a mower. There were broken arms and legs from falling off windmills and barns. A warm, personal friend was crushed by a tractor. I realize now that farming and ranching are two pretty dangerous occupations. There may not be so many accidents because of runaway horses as there used to be, but almost every machine on a farm can cripple—or kill.

No Doctors Close to Farms.

I remember one hunting accident on a neighbor's farm. A young man was badly shot. His life might have been saved had a doctor been available. That's one of the dangers of farm accidents—doctors are always in a town, often many miles away.

Farm Safety Week is a worthwhile movement which is gaining impetus each year. Governors of many of the big farming states issue timely proclamations calling attention to it. Farm implement manufacturers and dealers feature posters and displays, and in some places safety demonstrations are held.

As everyone who lives, or has ever lived, in a farming community knows, farm accidents—though apparently rare — happen entirely too often. Most new machinery has safety devices which should be used. Proper clothing is more and more important in mechanized farming.

Urge farm safety, not only during Farm Safety Week, July 21 to July 27, but every day of the year.

Fishermen's Luck

Mrs. Eli W. Scott, a neighbor woman, met them, displaying two large catfish which she had caught in a small creek on Boucher's property, not more than 100 feet from his house.

Farmers Are Still Trading In Wisconsin's Small Towns

By E. L. KIRKPATRICK
WNU Features.

Only one in four of Marathon county's (Wisconsin) 7,200 farmers buys lumber, cement and feed in Wausau (county seat and largest town, 27,000 population). Around 30 per cent buy farm supplies and groceries there, 50 per cent shoes and 60 per cent furniture and clothing. Others trade mostly in smaller towns or villages of which there are more than a dozen in the county.

In spite of good roads to larger centers, rural dwellers still depend on the home town for many of their facilities and services, says a market survey made by the local chamber of commerce in co-operation with the state chamber and the University of Wisconsin.

Marathon county's farmers intended to spend 7½ million dollars within two years after the war, largest amount going into autos and trucks, with farm machinery a close second and repair and remodeling of farm buildings next. Installation of water systems is principal home repair item; refrigerators the most universally desired appliance.

One in 12 farm families hoped to build new houses at an average cost of $2,300. More than half of the farmers plan to pay for purchases out of money saved, 12 per cent use farm credit, 18 per cent both.

This is even more interesting, if one recalls that Marathon with more than 1,000,000 acres of land, ranks tops among all counties in production of American cheese and fifth in milk, with more than 182 million quarts annually. And more, it has the largest silver fox raising center in the United States.

Demand for Peanuts Still Big in 1946

VIRGINIA BEACH, VA.—Prices for 1946 peanuts, tenth largest field crop in America, will receive government support if necessary. But Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson told 400 growers, processors and shippers from 23 states here that he did not think price help would be needed.

A war emergency crop that increased four times to a total acreage of three million in four years, peanuts are in high demand in 1946, the secretary said. He and other government experts warned, however, that soon peanuts will face a buyer's market.

Making Roosters Taste Like Hens

BATON ROUGE, LA. — The Louisiana State university poultry husbandry division is experimenting with the prospects of converting the stringy meat of roosters into the tenderness of a hen's.

The scientists are injecting synthetic female hormones to give the rooster more desirable meat qualities. The roosters, after four to six weeks of the injections, shrink in size and develop layers of fat, a prime requisite for tender meat.

The men accepted the challenge and really went to work. The ladies admitted that some of the chapeaux created were too bad!

Auto Man Gets Horse and Buggy Wedding Trip

STURGEON BAY, WIS.—When LeRoy Ehlers, auto mechanic, took Miss Erma Felhofer as his bride at the Valmy church, his co-workers at the garage where he is employed rigged him up in style befitting an automobile man.

When the couple emerged from the church a surrey (with the fringe on top) awaited them. A coachman, Hugo Kalms, in formal dress, stood stiffly by the horses. Mr. and Mrs. Ehlers got into the surrey and drove to the Ed Felhofer home where dinner was served.

Thus, after a half-century, automobile men heed grandpa's snapper: "Get a horse!"

Autos and Dogs Help City Funds

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, ILL. —There has been a sudden spurt in total license receipts in this town. Forrest Davis, village clerk, says it can be traced to autos, dogs and business houses.

Automobile receipts during the first quarter of 1946 increased over $500, and business licenses have yielded $1,000 more. But the greatest gain in percentage has been from sale of dog licenses, which jumped from $410 for all of 1945 to $859 for the first quarter of 1946.

"It's not a case of more dogs," Police Chief Skoog explained. "We've just got 'em educated to buying dog tags."

In other words, a stray dog doesn't stray far in Arlington Heights unless it has a license. Officials recommend similar "educational" campaigns for other towns.

WATER FOR NEW FARMS . . . A crowd of 5,000 attended dedication ceremonies as water was turned on at the 50,000-acre Deschutes irrigation project in Central Oregon. The life-giving water will make the desert bloom.

Project Means 800 New Oregon Farms

In former years of dry farming the entire 50,000 acres were owned by 25 families, but the bureau of reclamation has brought water to the Deschutes project in central Oregon and there will be 800 new farms operating soon.

The Deschutes project is one of the first concrete postwar steps to provide farming opportunities for qualified veterans in the West. Already 80 veterans have found homes on the project, and many more are being considered. The clearing and leveling of the land, building of homes, schools and roads, makes the enterprise one of modern pioneering.

The first water was turned on the land on May 18 and there will be many green fields this season. Eventually the entire 50,000 acres will be under cultivation, or put into permanent irrigated pasture.

WHAT'S THE ORIGIN?

y dictionary states that the term "boche," for German, ortened form of "caboche," rd for cabbage, hence, "a eaded man." My father, born nce, denies that this is so. u clear it up for us?

ccording to certain French in my library, your father's is justified. The Larousse dictionary, for example, "boche" as the abbreviation lboche," a derisive term from "Allemand," meaning an."

the book "Facts About ," published in Paris in 1918 Saillens, interpreter to the Expeditionary force during War I, lists "boche" as Pari- lang from "Alboche (Alleit is unlikely that the origin che" from "caboche" is authentic. It is just a shrewd guess.

The customary English pronunciation of boche is like the exclamation "bosh."

In French, boche is pronounced: bawsh; also, it often rhymes with "hush, rush," in accordance with the French tendency to give "o" an obscured sound resembling the "o" of "come, connect."

* * *

Massacre is often heard as "MASS-uh-kree," because of the -cre of the third syllable. Massacre is French. In that language it is pronounced mas-SA-kruh, both "a's" almost as flat as in "mass, sack." In English, however, the accent shifts to the first syllable, and the third syllable is pronounced "ker" as in "maker." thus: MASS-uh-ker.

Q. Please discuss the pronunciation of "appreciate" and "appreciation." The speech instructor at ——— college insists that the third syllable is correct only as "see."—M. A. E.

A. Sorry, but the "see" sound has no dictionary sanction, nor is it heard in unaffected speech. The dictionaries show the third syllable as "shi," as in "ship."

In Standard American, however, the second is nearer to if not exactly like the "shee" of "sheep." Thus: uh-PREE-shee-ate; uh-PREE-shee AY'shun.

PRACTICAL FARM BUILDINGS

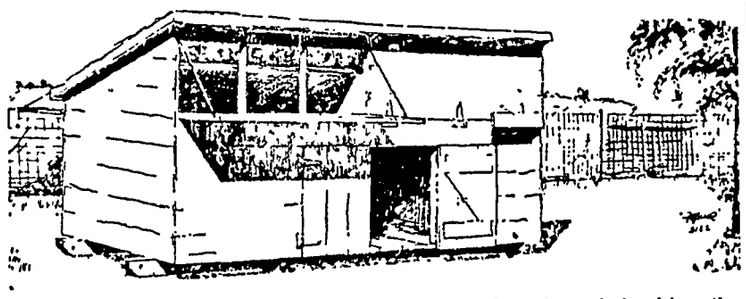
Portable Hog House

By W. J. Dryden, WNU Farm Editor.

Hogs when properly housed, fed and managed are one of the best sources of farm income. Poor ancestry, neglect or cold damp buildings and improper feeding will not produce paying hogs.

Where the winters are long and cold and snowstorms are frequent, warm and perfectly weatherproofed buildings must be constructed. There is no building on the farm that gives so great net returns, year after year, for the expenditure incurred, as a good hog house. The size of the house will be determined by the size of the hog operations.

A good hog house will provide pens, floors, walls, ceiling and equipment that can be cleaned so as to prevent disease and to control parasites. Adequate space will be provided. The building will protect the animals from cold, wind, rain and snow and from excessive summer heat. It will provide for safety of the animals and of persons, both from injury by animals and by contact with the structure.



When movable houses are used, such as the Minnesota one illustrated on this page, consideration should be given to the selection of a well-drained site and to the layout of fences and roads; also to provisions for feeding, water supply, shade and wallows, so as to minimize labor and to promote the comfort of the animals.

Movable houses should be well braced to prevent being racked when moved from one place to another. The use of creosoted lumber, particularly for members in contact with the soil, lengthens the life of the house. Creosote treatment is particularly valuable in warm, damp areas where untreated wood is relatively short-lived.

Primary requisites in floor construction are durability and ease in cleaning. Removable floors have the advantages of lightness for moving and of being easily cleaned. Plank floors, if well built, are serviceable. They should be tongue-and-groove planking or of 12-inch plank with splines.

The first requirement for heat conservation in a hog house is tightness of construction in all details. Cracks in walls, floors, or roofs or around doors or windows admit drafts, offset the effect of insulation and result in losses of pigs. Leakage of cold air into insulated space may seriously reduce the warmth of construction. The use of fill insulation at the junction of the wall and roof or ceiling will reduce such infiltration.

Hog buildings in general can be more economically constructed through the use of short lengths of woods. A good hog house need not be expensive.

Portable houses are highly important for sanitation reasons. Thoroughly cleaned houses moved to clean ground will provide good sanitary conditions. When pasture season arrives, the portable houses with sows and litters may be transferred to clean land, where pigs have not been kept for at least two years. The combination of clean houses, clean sows and clean pasture will eliminate diseases as well as parasites.

The colony house shown will provide, at low cost, all year accommodations for sows, litters and market hogs. Litters farrowed in it may use it effectively for the entire production season. Even in extreme weather through banking the outside with straw or coarse hay, comfortable quarters are insured.

The electric pig brooder will make the portable hog house an all-year-house, suitable for farrowing pigs successfully in any season. The brooder fits conveniently into the corner of the pen next to the partition, so one duplex electrical outlet will serve both pens at the same time.

Most types of portable hog houses may be constructed with waste lumber. When the hog operations are to be large in addition to the portable houses, it is usually advisable to construct a long hog barn. The length will depend upon the number of hogs to be housed at any one time. Equipped with litter carriers for the carrying out of waste matter as well as carrying in feed, this type of building will save considerable labor. It may also be equipped with automatic water system.

Food for Fun

Your great party problem is still, "How do we get the boys out of the corners and on the dance floor?" Well, as the skater said when he fell into the water—"You must first break the ice." Try our food-for-fun frolics as an aid to congestion.

String 'Em Along—Attach equally long lengths of string to each end of a pretzel. A girl puts the end of one string in her mouth; a boy bites on the other. The object of the game is to see which can nibble up to the pretzel first. Hands behind backs, please.

Keep Your Chin Up—We haven't seen this one in action, but we advise a bottle of liniment for refreshment after it's over. One person places an orange under his—or her—chin. The object is to pass the orange from chin to chin. First one who drops it, drops out—until the winner is left holding the orange. It's a tight squeeze!

Bean Bingo—With a glass and a handful of beans, you can wind up the party and set it in motion. Each guest gets an equal number of beans—and each one has a try at throwing the beans into the jar from an equal distance. Prizes for the best shot.

Straws in the Wind—Divide your guests into two teams. Equip each player with a soda straw and give each starter a pretzel. The idea is to pass the pretzel from straw to straw and see which team finishes first. Let's dance, huh?

THE LAW IN JESUS' DAY

LESSON TEXT — Deuteronomy 6:4-9; Matthew 5:17-19; Mark 10:17-22.

MEMORY SELECTION — Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I came not to destroy, but to fulfill.—Matthew 5:17.

Jesus Christ is the believer's final authority. He is both our Saviour and our Lord. He is our teacher, our guide, our pattern in all things. It is therefore of the highest importance that we know his attitude toward the Old Testament laws, and that is just what we are to consider in the lessons of the next three months under the general title, "Jesus Interprets Old Testament Laws."

Our introductory lesson tells us of the origin, interpretation and application of the law, then we go in later lessons to consider the Ten Commandments in the light of the teachings of Jesus.

It is appropriate to point out that, far from being outmoded, the Ten Commandments are really the basis of all moral law. They need a diligent restudy and re-emphasis in our day of disregard of moral standards.

I. The Law—Given by God (Deut. 6:4-9).

Our God is the one true God who is to have the complete and constant devotion of all. The fact that so many men have ignored him explains the awful depth to which the world has fallen.

This one and only true God has given through his servant, Moses, the fundamental moral law for the government of man, and he is to give diligent attention to it at all times.

Religion in the household (v. 7) should include the teaching of the Word, and the easy natural discussion of spiritual things in all the varying circumstances of home life. Blessed are the parents who make it easy for children to talk about the things of God as naturally and unaffectedly as they discuss the other phases of life which interest them.

The law of God should go with his people into their daily occupations (v. 8), not in any formal or stilted way but as the normal expression of their love for him. It should be evident to all who enter the home that the Lord is loved and honored (v. 9).

II. The Law Fulfilled by Jesus (Matt. 5:17-19).

The law of God is eternal, never to be abrogated, never set aside. Christ himself, although we might properly say that he was in reality the lawgiver and thus had power and authority over the law, indicated his purpose in coming to be that of giving the law its full meaning, not of destroying it.

One could wish that those who profess to be his servants might have the same measure of regard for God's law. If they did, they obviously would not be so ready to ignore it, so quick to change it or explain it away, and far more ready to accept with their Master every "jot and tittle"; that is, even the minutest detail of his Word.

It is a mark of greatness "to do and teach" the law of God (v. 19), and of pathetic smallness to break his commandments and to teach others to disobey God. Some of the supposed great men of this world are mighty small when they are measured by God's yardstick.

The one who recognizes Christ as the fulfillment of the law will go on in consistent living. In his strength and by his grace we are to obey every moral precept.

III. The Law—Applied to Man (Mark 10:17-22).

The moral law, which is God's law, is good and in its keeping man finds guidance for his life. Apart from Christ, however, he finds himself unable to keep the law.

The gospel of the grace of God in Christ Jesus takes us a step beyond the law, and it is a great step for here we meet and follow the one who is greater than the law, the giver of eternal life.

Obedience to the commandments brings a man up to the very entrance upon that life, but to enter in he must have more than the "things" of the law; he must have the person who is "the door" to eternal life.

The young man who came to Christ was rich. His mind was obsessed with things. He had made it his business to observe the law, and had done well (v. 20), but his soul was not satisfied. He thought one more "thing" that he could do would accomplish his purpose.

The general attitude of the man was commendable. He sensed his lack of the vital something which would remake his life. He came to the right one—the Lord Jesus—with his question.

His failure to go beyond the things of the law to a faith in Christ, however, showed that he loved his possessions more than he desired to follow the Lord.

REJECT BIDS ON RIVER BRIDGES

Hancock county supervisors rejected all bids on the construction of 2 concrete bridges to be built over the Boone river in Boone township when the bids were found to run approximately 50% over the engineer's estimate.

The engineer's estimate on the 2 structures was about $25,000 and the lowest bid was approximately $38,000.

The uncertainty of structural steel delivery and price was advanced as the reason for the unfavorable bids.

Boy's Essay On An Editor

I don't know how newspapers got into the world, and I don't think God does, for He ain't got nothing to say about them in the Bible. I think the editor is the missing link we read of, and that he stayed in the bushes until after the flood and then came out and wrote the thing up, and has been kept busy ever since. If the editor makes mistakes, folks say he ought to be hung, but if the doctor makes mistakes he buries them and people don't say nothing because they can't write Latin. When the editor makes mistakes there is a big lawsuit, and swearing, and a big fuss; but if the doctor makes one there is a funeral with flowers and perfect silence A doctor can use a word a yard long without him or anyone else knowing what it means, but if the editor uses one he has to spell it. If the doctor goes to see another man's wife, he charges for the visit, but if the editor goes he gets a charge of buckshot. Any college can make doctors but editors has to be born.

LICENSE PLATES TO SHOW GOVERNMENTAL SUBDIVISION OF DRIVER

The 1947 Iowa license plates for motor vehicles operated by the various governmental subdivisions will show whether the vehicle is owned by the state, a county, city, or school district, it was learned Friday.

The sources, who declined to be identifid by name, said the change was being made because of numerous complaints from motorists that some drivers of official vehicles were violatng state traffic laws.

The present plates do not designate the governmental subdivision which owns the various official vehicles.

Nation's Steel Capacity Is Widely Distributed

Not only is the iron and steel industry's present annual capacity bigger than ever—ample to meet all peacetime requirements—it is more widely distributed over the nation than ever before. Part of the industry's 1945 steel ingot capacity of 95,505,280 tons is located in four states: Oregon, Virginia, Tennessee and Utah, which in 1938 had no such facilities. The grand total of states having steel capacity is now 27.

Altogether, 25 states have open hearth capacity now against 22 states in 1938. Six states have capacity for the production of Bessemer steel currently and 16 states contain electric furnace capacity against 12 in 1938. Tennessee, Virginia, Oklahoma and Oregon are the newcomers in electric furnace steelmaking as a result of the industry's expansion during the seven-year interval.

The nation's present capacity for making 67,313,890 net tons of pig iron and ferro alloys per year is now located in 18 states. The industry's coke is produced in 16 states. Pennsylvania is still the leading state in open hearth capacity. It has 26,218,350 tons of capacity annually and 374 furnaces. The runner-up state is Ohio, which has 169 open hearth furnaces with 15,350,000 tons capacity. Other states which constitute the top ten in open hearth capacity are Indiana, Illinois, New York, Maryland, Alabama, Michigan, West Virginia and California.

Here Are Pointers for Buying Pots and Pans

Points to check when buying pans and kettles, say house management specialists are: (1) Balance—the pan and its handle should be well-balanced so that the pan stands steady even when empty. Too heavy a handle makes a tipsy pan that is awkward to use and may cause dangerous spills of hot water or food.

(2) Surface — the fewer the cracks at joinings, the more durable and easy to clean it will be.

(3) Bottom — a flat bottom helps keep a pan steady and means faster heating and more economical use of fuel. Pans for use on electric stoves should have dull-finished bottoms to save the fuel. A dull finish absorbs heat in contrast to a shiny finish which reflects it.

Straight sides are more economical of heat and also of space on the stove than flaring sides. Handles of pans and covers should be comfortable to grasp and insulated against heat. A close-fitting cover is essential for many cooking processes, so buying a pan and cover together is often worth the extra money. Thin, lightweight aluminum is less expensive and less durable than the heavy metal. Thin ware is easily dented, bent and scorches easier than heavy wear. Heavy wear is economical.

Sheet Durability

Durability in sheets and pillowcases depends on weight per square yard and thread count—that is, the number of threads running in each direction per inch. Many sheets come marked as to thread count, and some manufacturers also indicate weight per yard. For muslin sheetings, this count should not be less than 62 or the fabric may lack tensile strength. In percales it will be higher still. In fact, the only difference between muslin and percale is the fineness of the weave—which is another way of saying that percale has a much higher thread count. The housewife should note the weight of the sheets she considers buying because thread count alone doesn't tell the whole story. The size and strength of the yarn, indicated by weight, should be taken into account. If the yarns from which the fabric is woven are as strong as they should be, the sheet will have a good weight.

Frozen Milk

Frozen homogenized milk, used by the army during the war to supply milk to men on hospital ships, now offers promise for sea-going travelers as well as for milk-short areas such as the Panama Canal Zone, Bermuda and other outlying islands, dairy specialists of the department of agriculture believe. The milk served on hospital ships is pasteurized, homogenized and kept frozen in paper containers until thawed for serving. It holds its fresh flavor well for as long as three and four months, and has been favorably received by military patients who drank it at the rate of thousands of quarts a week. To save space on ships, the army experimented with frozen concentrated milk, but it did not prove successful because it does not hold its flavor nearly as long as the frozen whole milk.

Sheet Classifications

Textile experts in the department of agriculture group sheets into five classifications—light, medium, and heavy weight muslin, fine counts and percales. Heavy muslin is the strongest of the lot; but it is heavy for the laundress to handle and the weight swells laundry bills if sent to commercial laundries. At the other end of the scale, percales are tops for fineness and good looks, but they may be slow in returning to market. Any sheet worth the money is firm, almost sizing-free, is torn rather than cut from the bolt and is hemmed with strong thread and short, even stitches.

STROMER HOUSE DAMAGED IN MOVING, TIMBER BREAKS

Last Thursday afternoon a house-moving gang were moving the Paul Stromer house, located across the road west from the Stromer farm, and used to house the tenant family, to a spot closer to the road where a foundation had been built.

As the house was being moved to the foundation, one of the large supporting timbers snapped and the house tipped off the timbers damaging a lean-to of the structure. Damage was also done to the interior and dishes fell to the floor and broke.

Find Meat Necessary To Expectant Mothers

Meat is necessary in the diet of expectant mothers because of its high protein content, according to Ruth M. Leverton and Thelma J. McMillan of the Nebraska agricultural experiment station at Lincoln. The experimenters said they tested the effectiveness of the recommendation "Eat plenty of meat—a generous serving at least twice a day." Protein supplies the material to replace tissue waste and, to some extent, contributes to the development of energy.

To insure that the women were receiving "plenty of meat," they were supplied with a five ounce serving of lean meat daily. They ate this supplementary meat in addition to their self-chosen diets. For each woman who was supplied meat, there were two experimental partners, women of approximately the same age, who had had the same number of children, were at the same stage of pregnancy and whose blood had the same hemoglobin (oxygen-carrying red pigment of the red blood corpuscles) value. One partner received a vitamin B complex supplement daily while the other partner received no supplement.

Results showed that the women who received the additional meat had consistently better hemoglobin and red cell values at all times than did their experimental partners who received either B complex or no supplement at all. There was no edema (swelling due to accumulation of large amounts of fluid in the intercellular tissue spaces of the body), and better success was attained in the secretion of milk among the meat eating group.

Turbine Changes Colors To Tell Own Temperature

The gas turbine, powerful combustion engine which since development has refused to have its temperature taken, has been forced literally to take its own temperature through recent use of a special metal alloy, which tells temperature by color.

The alloy shows a marked color change for every 25 degree change in temperature from 500 degrees centigrade to 700 degrees centigrade, then reverts back to its original color and begins the color scale over again in a higher range of from 725 degrees to 900 degrees centigrade.

Believed to be the highest temperature ever recorded accurately inside a gas turbine, such intense heat would amount to 1,652 degrees above zero on an ordinary, household Fahrenheit thermometer, were it able to record that high. The temperature-taking alloy, according to engineers, turned the tables on the gas turbine after practically all types of complicated temperature measuring devices had failed to record faithfully the intense and varied heat created by the turbine wheel, which whirls more than 1,000 miles per hour.

New Maps

World War II saw the development by geologists of new maps, called "terrain diagrams." The third dimension usually portrayed on flat maps by means of contour lines or other markings were made obvious to the men of the army's field forces in the form of realistic drawings which showed how the landscape would look from certain vantage points. One of these drawings of fields and neighboring hills, which, of course, could not be camouflaged, was given to the air forces for the bombing of the Romanian oil center of Ploesti. The center itself had been so well camouflaged that Allied bombers had failed to find it. Using the terrain diagram on a second attempt, the bombers found and obliterated their target.

Easter Island

"There is no scientific evidence that Easter Island is the wreckage of a sunken continent," Dr. Metraux said. It is plainly a typical volcanic island of recent origin, formed by a series of eruptions originating on the floor of the ocean. Moreover, when the island was settled by Polynesian migrants it does not seem to have been much more extensive than it is now. Its coasts are subjected to continual erosion from the waves, and it is true that during the last decades a few of the monuments which once stood on the top of a high cliff have been precipitated into the sea. But since the ancient sanctuaries were erected along the shore, if the erosion had been very great all of them would have been washed away by now.

Spotted Furniture

White spots on varnished furniture may be caused by standing water, hot dishes or alcohol, according to wood experts. If the spots are slight, they may be removed simply by rubbing with camphorated oil or oil of peppermint. Or they may disappear when the surface of the furniture is washed with a mixture of one quart of warm water, three tablespoons of boiled linseed oil, and one tablespoon of turpentine, then dried with a soft dry cloth and rubbed with furniture polish. For more severe white spots—those that are old or very deep—an abrasive may be needed as well as oil. One mixture that may be used for removing them is salt and salad oil.

NEED TO CONTOUR SHOWN BY RAINS

Damage to Corn Shows Need For Proper Terracing And Contouring

Proof of what contouring and terracing can mean to the Iowa farmer in terms of dollars and cents was conclusively demonstrated during the heavy downpours the latter part of June, G. M Browning, soil conservationist at Iowa State College, said this week. And he pointed out that for many it was an expensive lesson.

Damage to corn from washing out was extensive in many sections, Browning reported, and the loss in terms of topsoil mounted into thousands of dollars.

Good Terraces Important

In areas where rainfall was especially heavy, the importance of proper terrace construction and contouring also was brought out. In cases where terraces were not as high as they should be, the water broke over and washed out the terrace construction. In other instances, only contouring had been used on slopes where terraces also were needed.

But the mistake that showed up most commonly, in Browning's opinion, was that of planting corn in straight rows where hilltops leveled off and starting the contoured rows farther down the slopes. In such cases, losses were heavy. They could have been prevented by throwing up terraces where the slope began and contouring the top even though the slopes were gentle.

Even if land slopes no more than 4 or 5 percent, where the slopes are long they should be terraced, Browning said.

The Auto Telephone

Telephone service to and from your auto is now a reality, and the A. T. & T. announces its first subscriber. This marks the end of the motor car as a pleasure vehicle.

—*—

A St. Louis man has the first autophone. He can pick up the receiver in his machine and reach 27,000,000 telephone outlets of the A. T. & T. "Ring me up sometime when I'm NOT home" is no longer a gag.

—*—

Routine cracks will presently be, "I tried to get you on the phone but your limousine was busy," and "Central, call that beachwagon again. I know he's in it."

—*—

You can get a phone in your bus for $15 a month. This gives you a phone number, a book and the right to get a wrong number while going around curves at high speed.

—*—

It is going to make the life of a driver more confusing than ever. Up to now he has only had to watch the road, observe the stop lights, listen to the radio and make conversation with the backseat driver. From now on he will have to remember names, look up phone numbers, keep the phone book handy and argue with the complaint operator as well.

—*—

Be ready for these answers any day now:

"The taxi you called has hung up."

"The beachwagon has been temporarily disconnected."

"Are you sure you are calling the right flivver?"

"I had that sedan on the phone a minute ago but it went into a ditch."

—*—

The outlook is depressing. It was bad enough to have the kids in the back seat taking the hardware off the doors, disconnecting the ceiling lights and playing handball with a hotdog and a mustard pot without having them trying to get playmates on the telephone 2,500 miles away.

—*—

One of the great benefactions of the auto was that it gave man a chance to get away from it all. Must he now be practically in a phone booth when he is bounding over the wide-open spaces?

—*—

Listen, central, if anybody asks for our car, say we communicate by smoke signals only.

An extra patty of butter to: Damon Runyon for his exposure of some of our leading radio programs as piping pretty vulgar stuff to the kiddies. . . . "It comes as a great shock to me," he writes, "when some great performer whose programs are awaited with eagerness blats out vulgarisms that cannot fail to be offensive to most ears. I see no excuse for it. I have heard too many tremendous performers who got their laughs without descending to bad taste."

Orson's Worst Night

In all his experiences with "Around the World" (or "Welles-A-Poppin',") Mr. Welles will not soon forget his most terrible night in the theater, which must have been at the try-out of this play in New Haven. Everything went wrong. The movies in the introductory episode, the key to the whole story, would not focus and after five minutes of confusion Orson came out and was beginning to explain that it would be necessary to forget them when suddenly they began screening clearly. The moment Mr. Welles bowed off, the screen went white again. This time Orson, maintaining amazing poise and good humor, came out and made the curtain speech of the year. "We don't know any more what the trouble is than you do," he said. "But my mother always told me this would happen to me someday."

ENDURANCE CONTEST

I know a man who is a grouch—
He drinks and stays up late;
He rarely says a kindly word
And is an ugly skate;
His wife to no divorce court goes—
Her love for him is warm;
"He's been that way for twenty years,"
She says, "and MAY reform."

Typewriter Doodling:

Love-Letter Dept.: From Emery Reves, author of the best-seller, "The Anatomy of Peace." . . . "This is one of the most peculiar moments of history. The problem of war between the nations is solved. The organization of peace on a world-wide level is within our grasp. And yet—the probability is that we shall run into our own destruction because of the conformism and complacency of the press, radio, movies, churches and all the other organizations and technical media of mass enlightenment and education. I thank you for the rare exception you represent."

Quotation Marksmanship: R. C. O'Brien: Think, before you brag about your ancestors—would they brag about you? . . . Chuchu Martinez: As inseparable as ham and ego. . . . Irving Hoffman: Ethel Merman's tombouyancy. . . . Anon: We have two ends, one to sit on, the other to think with. Success depends on which end you use most. Heads you win, tails you lose! . . . J. Joubert: Mediocrity is excellent to the mediocre. . . . I. Panin: All wish for a long life; few realize it means old age. . . . R. Frost: The world is full of willing people. Some willing to work and the rest willing to let them. . . . Mlle. Bertin: There's nothing new except what is forgotten. . . . Dr. Wm. Brady: And other things too bloomerous to mention. . . . Eric Remarque: Women should be adored or abandoned—nothing in-between.

Larry Singer, visiting the bunch, told of the hoax put over (in the 1930s) by the editors of the Cornell University Sun. . . . They sent out scores of invitations to political leaders throughout the nation, asking them to attend a dinner in honor of Hugo N. Frye, "the founder of the Republican Party in N. Y. State." . . . Effusive tributes to that stalwart gentleman came from many Congressmen, Senators and Governors. . . . When the Sun staff finally held their shindig they revealed the name of their hero—"You-Go-and-Fry!"

Some of the lobster shift over at the N. Y. Mirror (having put the final edition to bed) sat around gabbing about the craft.

They rehashed Irv Leiberman's saga about the two correspondents (for a national mag) who had strolled out of a mess hall at a Pacific base. . . . Just then a beautiful native doll ankled towards them along the road. . . . She came on gracefully, looking neither right nor left. . . . As she passed, one of the lads clutched the other for support, and both gave her a double-take.

Her button-down-the-front dress was securely fastened by eight Good Conduct Ribbons!

Johnny and Mike Hodgins of the composing room brought in this clipping, which Editor & Publisher quoted from a mid-west paper.

"Pa," said the subscriber's little daughter, "why do editors always refer to themselves as 'we'?"

"So that," replied papa, "the fellow who doesn't like what is printed about him will think there are too many for him to lick."

Several correspondents have reported that the American occupation of western Germany is proceeding according to anything but the plan set at Potsdam. . . . One of the staff, who recently returned from there, explained: "The DPs are getting kicked around while some Nazis live in comfort. That's at the bottom. At the top, German industrialists are being helped back into power instead of being indicted as war criminals. It seems that the Nazi occupation of Germany is proceeding smoothly and the Hitlerites are determined that the U. S. zone will soon be completely de-Americanized."

One of the interesting observations came from Irving, the night phone operator. . . . He told of the editor of Algar, an astrologists' mag. . . . This editor used to get as high as $1,000 per reading from Wall Streeters. . . . He once took a policy from broker Max Reibeisen—for $10,000. . . . "Do you," said Max, "wish to pay it annually, semi-annually or quarterly?"

"Quarterly—up until July 21st," said the astrologer. "It is silly after that because my horoscope says I'll die then."

On July 21st, to the very day, Reibeisen received a phone call from Atlantic City. . . . The astrologer succumbed from pneumonia.

Critic Robert Coleman said that Alec Woollcott once slept through an opening and then, after filing his review with Western Union, went to Sardi's, where he promptly fell asleep at a table.

"Look at that guy," said Kelcy Allen, "taking an encore!"

A newsweekly (the other issue) featured this: Justice Murphy's opinions are now referred to in Supreme court circles as "justice tempered with Murphy."

Dog Retrieves Duck Before Shot Fired

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y. — You don't have to believe this story, but—

District Game Protector J. M. Corbine of the state conservation department declares that his dog, a golden retriever, retrieves ducks even before they are shot down.

Recently his dog came home with an eight-pound duck, retrieved from a neighbor's barnyard a half mile away. The dog didn't pick the duck up and carry it that far—no, sir-ee! Instead, the dog took the duck's bill in his mouth and led the quacker along, forcing it to duck-walk all the way.

DELAWARE

The First State

By EDWARD EMERINE
WNU Features.

DELAWARE is that BIG little state in the heart of the East coast, where so many riches are confined to a small area. It is rich in soil and climate as well as in material things — industries, banks and corporations. It is also rich in traditions and history, in military and naval heroes, in venerable homes, churches and public buildings. It is called "The Diamond State."

"After having seen . . . the banks of the Brandywine a scene of bloody fighting, I am happy now to find upon them the seat of industry, beauty and mutual friendship," said Lafayette when he visited Delaware in 1824.

For more than 300 years the citizens of Delaware have played a significant part in the development of the nation. It was one of the original 13 colonies and in 1787 it became the first state in the Union, ahead of all others in adopting the Constitution.

In 1638 the Swedes established a permanent settlement at Fort Christina, now a part of Wilmington. This colony superseded the ill-fated one by the Dutch in 1631 at Zwaanendael, now Lewes. Through the colonial period the Delaware counties were ruled successively by the Swedes, the Dutch and the English, under the duke of York and William Penn. In 1776 they declared their independence, emerging as the State of Delaware.

Industry, trade and commerce flourished. The inventions of Oliver Evans of Newport made the state one of the great flour-milling centers of the world. In 1802 the DuPont powder mills were established. The Delaware and Chesapeake canal was completed in 1829. Railroads, modern highways and airplanes came later, attracted by the progressive spirit of Delaware. This little state and its people have stood the test of time.

Most of the early settlers—Swedish, Finnish, Dutch, Scotch, Irish and English—were accustomed to tilling the soil. Situated within 250 miles of one-third of the population of the United States, Delaware farmers are close to a ready market and the state still has great agricultural importance. Wheat, corn, hay and other field crops are grown with ease and the sandy coastal area grows practically all agricultural crops, including fruits and vegetables, known in the Temperate zone. In the northern part of the state, the staple field crops predominate, but to the south the farmers rely upon peaches, apples, truck crops, small fruits, poultry and dairying.

Industry in Delaware began with grist mills, sawmills, boat and ship building, and other small manufacturers. Wilmington and vicinity is the chief manufacturing center of the state Its products are varied and include leather goods, ships, machinery and hardware. Wilmington is also the headquarters of E. I. duPont de Nemours and company, the nation's largest manufacturer of diversified chemical products. Likewise, Wilmington, the state's largest city, is its chief port, with ship traffic passing up the Delaware river. About 20 years ago the Delaware and Chesapeake canal was converted into a sea-level route.

Paper-making plants in the valley of the Brandywine employ thousands of workers. Kaolin clay is an important quarry industry. Along the coastline, fishing fleets follow the migrations of fish and much shad, herring, rock and sturgeon are taken. Delaware bay yields oysters, clams, crabs and lobsters. Fruit canning and evaporating industries have large plants in Dover, Milford, Middletown and Smyrna.

Delaware has a clear-cut recreation area—the shore line north and south of Cape Henlopen where the Delaware bay meets the Atlantic ocean. There is excellent salt water fishing there as well as swimming and bathing. Fresh water streams provide good fishing for bass, crappie, pike, yellow perch and catfish. The lower part of Delaware offers excellent gunning for small game. Some neighborhood clubs sponsor fox hunting. There are 50 fresh water lakes in the state.

Everywhere in Delaware is a landscape worth painting. With farms and orchards along the Delaware river and bay, the state is capped by hills in the north and ocean dunes in the south. It has trees of unusual height—pine, oak, walnut, hickory and yellow poplar predominating. The entire mainland was wooded when the colonists landed there. Even along the beaches the air is often pine-scented and health-giving.

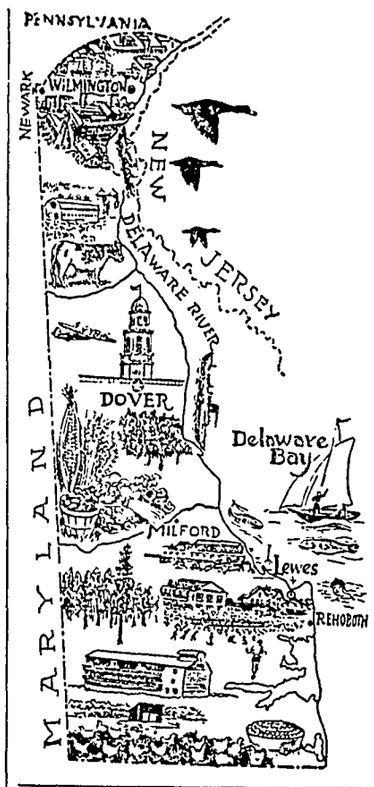
Every square foot in Delaware is historic ground. Every town has its markers and monuments to recall its glorious past, such as the statue in Wilmington to Caesar Rodney who cast the deciding vote to assure the Declaration of Independence. There are many old colonial homes in Dover and Lewes is known as the birthplace of the first state. Every road in Delaware leads to more markers, more reminders of three centuries of culture and tradition.

The flags of four nations have flown over Delaware—the Netherlands, Sweden, Great Britain and the United States. The state was named when Captain Samuel Argall of the English colony in Virginia came to the entrance of the bay and named it Cape La Warre, for Lord de la Warre, Sir Thomas West, then governor of Virginia. The state has long boasted of a balanced budget and low taxes. Delaware is little geographically, but it is big in every other way!

The main part of Wilmington crowds closely about tiny, open Rodney Square. From The Rocks, the city extends fanlike between two streams, the Christina river and Brandywine creek, into wooded highlands on the north and undulating lowlands on the south. It was first named Willingtown, the name being changed about 1740 in honor of the earl of Wilmington.

Dover, the capital, is near the center of the state. It is the market and shipping point for fruit, vegetables and other products grown in the low, fertile orchard and farm lands that surround it. In 1694 about 200 acres was bought for the town and a courthouse and prison were built some time before 1697. Nothing was done about laying out Dover, however, until 1717. It became the capital of the state in 1777, the seat of government being transferred from New Castle.

The University of Delaware is at Newark in the northwestern corner of the state. Lewes, at the mouth of Delaware bay, is the saltiest town in the state and known to every ship captain who has ever rounded Cape Henlopen in a gale. Milford was early noted as a shipping and shipbuilding town. New Castle, six miles south of Wilmington on the Delaware, is the oldest town in the Delaware valley and has many historical attractions. Rehoboth is the largest summer resort in Delaware, due to its excellent beach.



WALTER W. BACON
Governor of Delaware

Now in his second term in the State House, Governor Bacon was born in New Castle and has spent almost his entire time in that state. After a business career, he became mayor of Wilmington in 1935 and served three successive terms. He took office as governor in 1941 for a four-year term, and was re-elected in 1944 for another four years.

Delaware's Statehouse

Of historical interest is the old State House of Delaware at Dover, built on the site of the Kent county courthouse erected in 1722. By 1787 the facilities of the old courthouse were no longer adequate for the needs of both county government and the state legislature. It was decided to "pull down the old courthouse and use the hard bricks for the foundation of the new building" as there was not enough money for a stone foundation.

Funds were raised by a state lottery and construction of the new building started in 1792. Three years later the general assembly authorized the completion of the battlements, covered the roof with copper, erected stone steps, paved in front of the building and placed seats in both houses of the legislature.

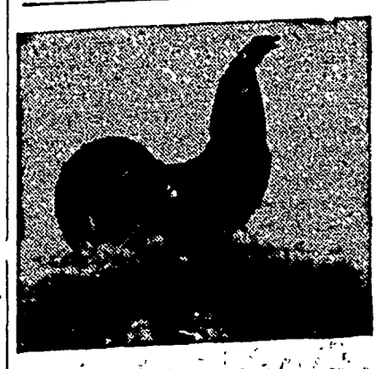
'The Blue Hen Chicken'



A Delaware tradition brought about the adoption in 1939 of a "Blue Hen Chicken" as the state bird. It was during the early days of the Revolutionary war that the men of Capt. Jonathan Caldwell's company, recruited in Kent county, took with them game chickens noted for their fighting ability, said to be of the brood of a famous blue hen.

Captain Caldwell's company was attached to a regiment that fought at Long Island, White Plains, Trenton and Princeton. When not fighting the enemy, the soldiers amused themselves by pitting these Blue Hen Chickens. When in battle, the Delaware men fought as valorously as these fighting cocks and became known as "Blue Hen's Chickens."

During the Civil war a company of militia organized in Kent county and adopted for themselves the name "Blue Hen's Chickens."

Summer garden planting is now in season. Early vegetables should be pulled, because such "boarders" don't earn their keep. Spent pea vines should be used to mulch tomatoes

Summer plantings should include cabbage for winter storage, tomatoes for late fruits and the late planting of cucumbers. Carrots, beets, bush snap beans and early-maturing sweet corn varieties also should be planted now

Growing a successful summer garden calls for a somewhat different procedure than spring planting. Make seed furrows deeper than for spring planting. Fill the furrows with water and then sow the seed in the mud and cover with dry soil or peat.

Protect plantings by covering with boards, grass clippings or peat. Boards must be removed, however, as soon as the seedlings break ground. Regular cultivation and frequent watering also are in order.

Chinese cabbage can be grown successfully by planting after the middle of July. It makes a delicious salad vegetable for fall and winter use. It is frost resistant and is not bothered by many of the diseases which attack common cabbage.

Many unsupecting gardeners will have potato production cut if late blight disease strikes. Late blight can take a patch in a short time. Cool, moist conditions favor development of the disease.

To be on the safe side, potato plants should be sprayed every 10 days. Four tablespoons of commercial dry bordeaux mixture dissolved in a gallon of water is a recommended solution.. Leaves should be coated underneath as well as on top.

Gardeners who are growing cauliflower this year should gather and tie the large outer leaves together when the heads are about 3 inches across. keeping out the light produces nice white heads.

Cauliflower should be harvested while the heads are tight. After heads start to spread they become ricey.

If pastures are infested with weeds, take the cows off the grass at least two or three days before milking time. Cows grazing on weed-infested pastures are likely to give flavored, low-quality milk.

FOOD SUPPLIES TO STAY ABOUT SAME

With the favorable crop outlook, food experts estimate that over-all food supplies for home use will be about the same this year as last.

The food outlook for the next 12 months—until July, 1947—has been prepared by government agricultural workers. They say canned fruit juices and whole fruit, canned vegetable juices are among the foods that promise to be more plentiful.

Less Meat, Eggs

But there will be less meat, poultry and eggs than during the past 12 months. Wheat products also will be harder to obtain.

The outlook is based upon expected production minus what the government will need for military purposes and foreign shipments.

Iowa farmers may expect continued high prices for nearly all major farm products because of the continued high demand in the face of tight supplies.

While the government expects to take less than half as much meat the remainder of this year and next year, total available supply for civilians will be less because of lower meat production. Total production is expected to be about 21 billion pounds which is 9 percent less than last year.

Butter Production

Nearly all of the butter production during the remainder of the year will go to civilians, but 120 million pounds of cheddar type cheese will be purchased for UNRRA and military agencies.

Egg production next year is expected to be from 4 to 8 percent less than last, while poultry meat production will fall as much as 12 percent. Military agencies still require considerable quantities of poultry and turkey meat as well as eggs. Foreign needs for these products have not been determined.

FARM ACCIDENTS CAN BE REDUCED

Majority Are With Machinery And Animals

The approach of National Farm Safety Week, July 21 through 27, brings to light new evidence of the need to curb farm accidents, says Harold Beaty, Iowa State College agricultural engineer.

Beaty points out that a quarter of all the occupational deaths in the nation occur in agriculture, more than in any of the other five major industrial groups. In 1943, last year for which figures are available, the nation's farm toll from accidents was 17,200 plus 1,500,000 injured. Of the injured about 15,000 were crippled for life.

Machinery and livestock are responsible for about half of these farm accidents, Beaty says. Falls cause 12 percent; excessive heat, 7 percent; lighting, 6 percent; burns and explosions, 5 percent; falling trees, 4 percent; and other work accidents 12 percent.

Prevention

One of the tragedies of most farm accidents is that they could have been prevented, Beaty believes. Accident hazards, carelessness are the most common causes.

Safety rules should be adopted by those working around farm machinery, Beaty says. The machine should be taken out of gear, for instance, before it is oiled, repaired or adjusted. The operator should never crawl through a running belt. Guards should be placed on gears, chains sprockets and power take-offs. And a safe distance should be kept from cables, chains and ropes that are under heavy strain.

Tractors Dangerous

Tractors can always be dangerous, too, Beaty warns. The gear shift always should be in neutral before cranking, and the machine should come to a complete stop before the operator dismounts. Another thing to keep in mind in connection with tractors is that as the speed doubles, the chances of overturning are four times greater.

Handling farm animals with care will help eliminate another cause of accidents, Beaty says.

In fact, using common sense and a little extra care in all farm operations will materially reduce the number of farm accidents this year.

Lake Mills Graphic:

Mr George Stamp finished harvesting his 10 acres of Early June peas last night with a yield of a trifle over 1¾ tons average per acre After all expences, labor, and seed have been deducted, Mr Stamp will have a net profit of $110 per acre for these 10 acres of peas. Many others are getting good yields, but have not completed harvesting

Mr Stamp has already plowed the pea ground and is planting this same ground into a crop of soy beans to be harvested this fall, for two crops from the same ground in one season. In addition to securing $110 per acre Mr. Stamp owns the pea silage, which is valuable feed.

BEGIN HARVEST OF GRAIN THIS WEEK

Corn Laid By, Much Hay Now In Bales Here

With plenty of warm weather the past week, corn shot skyward and was more than "knee-high by the fourth." Cultivation was completed in most corn fields the past week.

A lot of hay was put up the past week and many farmers report excellent yeilds. A lot of hay is now being baled in the field and it is a rare sight to see a hay stack around here. One farmer reports that he got 90 bales of hay to the acre last week.

The hot days of the past week turned oats to a golden yellow and the fields are ripening fast. Quite a few fields of oats will be cut and shocked by the end of this week. More and more fields are being combined each year. The writer saw a field of oats just south of Goodell which had been combined Sunday. It looked like the season had been rushed just a few days.

The United States Dept. of Agriculture reported last week that Iowa had prospects for the biggest crop in the history of the State. Hancock County crops are all looking like bumper crops now. The soy beans are looking very good also.

PUSH DAIRY PRODUCTION GAIN FROM HIGH PRICES

A. R. Porter, Iowa State College dairyman, says that higher prices will mean increased returns only to those Iowa farmers who maintain summer milk production.

Furnishing pasture shade, making sure the dairy animals have excess to good water supply and giving extra feed to high-producing cows will do the most to avoid a July and August milk slump, Porter says.

If natural shade isn't available in the pastures, artificial shade shelter can be set up at a minimum of cost. A pole-type shed, covered wth woven wire and straw, is one possibility. The animals need some place where they can get out of the hot sun during the middle of the day. A cool, shaded area also will give the animals relief from flies. Some farmers keep cows in the barn all or part of the day and let them graze at night.

Porter emphasizes that good dairy cows cannot keep at top production on a limited supply of water. The practice of shutting the animals in a pasture and watering them only twice a day is a mistake. If water is not available in the pasture, arrangements should be made to allow the cows to come to a water supply during the day.

While grain supplies are short most farmers do have hay or other roughage. During the summer months, giving cows extra feed in the form of hay or silage will pay off in the milk pail.

Quandts Buy Sleeping Trailer For Vacation Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Quandt were in Des Moines Tuesday and returned home with a nice aluminum sleeper car trailer which they had ordered earlier.

Mr. and Mrs. Quandt will use the trailer on their vacation trip this summer. It solves the worry of hunting up cabins each day. The trailer is light and pulls easily behind the car and they will always have their "hotel" with them when they stop each day.

The trailer also has compartments for carrying cooking utensils, gasoline stove, a place for food stuffs and an ice compartment.

Mr. Truman and the Farm

("I spent the best ten years of my life operating a 540-acre farm in Jackson county, Missouri."—President Truman.)

How sweet those ten years seem to me
Back there behind the plow
When from desk troubles I was free,
Although I didn't know!
They were the best years of my life
Despite each tough, long chore—
And I can realize it in
The White House more and more.

The furrow that I plowed was straight
And now I know just why:
Nobody looked for miracles
From just a country guy;
No one threw obstacles ahead.
Or tried to grab the plow—
Nobody bellowed free advice
Or yelled, "I'll show ya how!"

To chinch bug, cutworm, weevil wild
Apologies I make;
Compared to folks in Washington
You gave a man a break;
And, oh, to know again a job—
An older man and wiser—
When all my problems could be solved
By using fertilizer.

Honorary Degrees for 1946

Smirmey, Thaddeus K. (horse lover, business man and sportsman): A racing enthusiast, a man with normal reactions to business opportunities, and a fellow interested in a new track, you nevertheless refused to co-operate with your associates in seeking priorities so veterans could be deprived of homes while new racing plants went up on time. This makes you decidedly one of the Men of the Year and a decided standout in the sports world. Help yourself to any degree in the house and stay for some cold beans.

Snaffle, Dudley X. You increased your stature further by never referring to a woman as a tomato. This makes you the most unique radio star of the decade. Take a cluster of honorary degrees, and would you care for a glass of beer?

Minch, Oscar (legislator, stamp collector and good citizen): A member of congress with an election coming up and your seat in jeopardy, you called your shots, kept your courage, scorned the threats of special interests, and voted for such laws as you thought would keep your country from going over Niagara in a pressure-cooker. You at no time hedged, pussyfooted or acted like a greaseball. To you, Congressman Minch, we award a special crate of de luxe degrees and toss in four pounds of butter.

To remove scratches on woodwork and floors, rub with a little lard, then rub off with a clean cloth.

When the edges joined in a seam are cut on the bias, it is helpful to baste a piece of paper in with the two edges of fabric. After the seam is stitched tear away the paper. This little trick keeps the bias edges from stretching.

A broom that is sprinkled with kerosene occasionally will gather dust more easily.

Use the cuffs from dad's worn-out shirts for making shoulder pads. They're firm and generally give you all the padding you need.

To give your dinner party an air of the unusual, serve a small scoop of orange sherbet floating in chilled apple juice.

In patching underwear, use small cross stitches around the edge of the patch, say the experts. This makes for elasticity.

Here's a way to hang your criss-cross curtains so you won't have to use a double rod. Takes a little sewing on your part, but in the end none of the rod will show. Simply baste the top curtain to the lower one over the curtain's top row of stitching. Run the curtain rod through the heading on the under curtain. Top one gathers with it.

On any small apron sew numerous pockets. Into these slip your toilet articles. Fold the apron and put it in your suitcase. Then when you need a freshening up, toilet articles are where you need them.

Took Over 11 Hours to Run This Motion Picture

The longest motion picture ever released in this country was Gone with the Wind, which ran three hours and 50 minutes, or over twice as long as the average feature, says Collier's. The longest American picture ever produced was Greed, made in 1924.

While its running time was cut down to two hours and 56 minutes for theaters in the United States, this film was shown in Latin America in its original length, running 11 hours and 40 minutes over two consecutive nights.

Utah Has Set 1947 as Year For Centennial Celebration

SALT LAKE CITY.—On July 24, this year, Pioneer Day will be celebrated in every community in Utah to mark the date when, 99 years ago, Brigham Young and his 142 travelers entered Great Salt Lake valley.

As on each July 24, the 1946 celebration will be one of the biggest events of the year. Since July 24 is a state holiday, all business will be suspended and covered wagons, Mormon handcarts, and old-timers will pass in review in parades all over the intermountain territory.

But the big celebration will be held in 1947, which marks the 100th anniversary of the arrival of Brigham Young and his group. The state legislature in 1939 passed a bill setting apart the year 1947 for the centennial.

'This Is the Place.'

One of the features will be a wagon train of pioneers, starting at the site of the winter quarters of 1846 near Omaha and following the original pioneers' trail into Salt Lake valley. The train will enter at the spot where Brigham Young looked out over the desert and said: "This is the place." That was on July 24, 1847.

The centennial commission appointed by Gov. Herbert Maw include John M. Wallace, chairman of the finance committee; Ward C. Holbrook, John F. Fitzpatrick, Frederick P. Champ, Judge James A. Howell and Gus P. Backman, members. Backman was also selected as director of the centennial celebration. Albert J. Southwick, Salt Lake City musician, is chairman of the Days of '47 pageant committee.

The rich Salt Lake valley of today was a bleak desert when the pioneers arrived. Only one tree was to be seen on the site of what is now Salt Lake City. The pioneers built dams in the mountains to store water and dug ditches to carry it to their crops.

Great Salt Lake Will Dry up in Next 300 Years

SALT LAKE CITY. — If the general downward trend in the level of the Great Salt lake for the past 96 years continues for another 300 years, the lake will be as dry as the famous Bonneville salt flats, according to Ralf R. Woolley, senior hydraulic engineer, U. S. geological survey.

Supporting this speculation is the fact that Great Salt lake is a mere remnant anyway—all that is left of a once great fresh water lake that, in ages past, covered as much area as the present Lake Michigan. Evidences of this lake are numerous in the geology of the region, noticed by practically everyone living here.

The recording of Great Salt lake elevations started in 1850, three years after the arrival of the Mormon pioneers. Since that time, although there have been ups and downs, the general trend of the lake has been a loss of one foot of depth every 15 years.

Devoted Lifetime to Making World Clean

MANKATO, MINN. — R. G. Bachertz, age 70, has devoted most of his life to making this a cleaner world.

"Broom making is my hobby, vocation and recreation," he declares after 58 years in the business and for half a century the owner of the Mankato broom works.

Bachertz makes five kinds of regular brooms, whisk brooms, toy brooms and "miss" or junior brooms, and estimates that he has turned out over a million of them.

Found a Cure for Plant 'Wilt' and 'Athlete's Foot'

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The department of agriculture scientists started out to find a way to battle troublesome tomato plant "wilt." They discovered a chemical called "tomatin" which combats the wilt.

But they discovered something else, although they insist it is still "in the test tube stage." Tomatin will combat fungus organisms which plague human beings, and may be the source of a new drug to fight "athlete's foot!" They have found it powerfully active against the widely prevalent ringworm fungi which often attacks the feet, hands, face and scalp.

Roosters Motored to Town for Night Life

VALENTINE, NEBR. — Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Roe parked their pickup on Main street one evening recently, and shortly afterward Buck Junod, who was standing near by, heard roosters crowing.

"But we don't have any roosters in the pickup," protested the Roes.

Junod made an investigation, however, and found three roosters. They were perched on the drive shaft beneath the car where they had gone to roost and ridden to town with the Roes.

Southern Girl Is Mechanical Engineer

KNOXVILLE, TENN. — Odds were pretty heavy in September, 1942, when a 17-year-old freshman, Mary Porter Fain, entered the school of mechanical engineering at the University of Tennessee, that she would change her course before completing requirements for her degree. At least that is what the professors thought.

But on May 3, this year, when Mary got her bachelor of science degree and became the first girl to finish in mechanical engineering at the university, the professors had to eat their words. During her entire four years, Miss Fain managed to keep up with her male classmates.

Mary intends to use her knowledge, too. She wants to do design and research on engines or household appliances. A native of Murphy, N. C., she hopes to work somewhere in the south, but she will go up north among the Yankees if the right job is offered.

Iowa gardeners are winding up the last plantings of sweet corn, snap beans, carrots and beets. Many of the vegetables planted now and later in the month will be excellent to store fresh for winter use. Families not equipped to store vegetables might well consider making arrangements now to do so. Perhaps the best storage for the farm is a cave. Town and City families not able to wall off or insulate for a basement coid room might sink one or two 18 inch drain tiles in the ground for storing vegetables.

Keep an eagle eye on your tomato plants for the appearance of disease. Pick off and burn any diseased leaves.

Leaves of plants showing disease evidence such as stringiness, curliness and dwarfness likely have virus disease. It takes a stout-hearted gardener to remove such plants. But they must be pulled to prevent spread of the disease to healthy plants. Remove carefully and burn all diseased plants.

Tobacco users should beware of working around tomato plants while handling smoking tobacco. Tobacco often carries a mosaic disease that can infect tomato plants. This virus, according to plant pathologists, remains active in dried tobacco leaves for a long time, and is present to some extent in cigar, cigarette and pipe tobacco. Tobacco users, then, are likely to carry the virus on their hands. They would do well to wash their hands thoroughly before working around tomatoes.

Some gardeners are of the opinion that removing "suckers" from sweet corn will increase yields. Contrary to this opinion, however, experiments have proved suckering of sweet corn valueless. Neither the number or size of ears nor the total yield is increased. In fact, the practice can be harmful if the suckers are large when removed.

Table beets are especially sensitive to acid soil. So, if you've had trouble with your beets, a soil test might show too acid a condition and indicate how much lime would be needed for correction. A late planting of beets may do poorly, because of hot, dry weather. Frequent watering during hot weather usually will insure a good stand, however.

Towel Care

A few suggestions for the care of towels include rotating supplies by putting freshly laundered towels on the bottom of the pile. Mend snags or worn places in towels before they go into the wash to avoid further tearing. If the selvage shows wear, check fraying by taking several rows of stitches along the edge to strengthen it. Wash towels before they become too soiled and require extra rubbing and bleaching. Drying outdoors in the sunshine is a safe and effective way to whiten towels. Bring them in as soon as they are dry. Whipping by the wind may loosen yarns at corners and cause fraying. Whipping in the wind is especially hard on towels if they freeze on the line. Ironing makes turkish towels less absorbent and is wasted energy. Avoid splitting towels along creases by folding sometimes in halves and sometimes in thirds. And last but not least, men in the family should not use towels to wipe off razor blades.

Indian Relics

Ancestors of the American Indians left stone implements quite distinct from those of their descendants, some of them bearing striking similarities to those of ice-age men in Europe. However, these similarities are superficial and misleading. Whatever tool-making culture the early migrants brought with them must have been that of eastern Asia, where the development of stone working was quite distinct from that of Europe. The migrations southward, it is believed, could hardly have preceded the opening of the ice-free corridor east of the Rockies about 20,000 years ago. To find another ice-free corridor it would be necessary to go back another 20,000 years, but this is generally considered too ancient to have played any part in human activities.

Forestall Cannibalism

To forestall egg eating by the hens themselves, at least five corrective measures may be taken: (1) Provide at least one clean nest for every five layers; (2) Shade or darken nests, with burlap if necessary, allowing adequate ventilation; (3) Supply high-quality mash in sufficient quantity and oyster shell or some calcium supplement; (4) Gather eggs several times daily; (5) Get broody birds off the nest at once and confine them until broodiness is broken. Contrary to popular belief, the cocky rooster serves no useful purpose to the flock except in the propagation of the chicken clan and his dubious worth as an alarm clock. So, if the flock is being kept for egg production, segregate or market the roosters to save feed.

Military Funeral

From the earliest times soldiers, leaders, chiefs or kings have been buried with special marks of honor. The custom of having a riderless charger follow the gun carriage originated in the days when the horse of the dead soldier or leader was taken to the grave and slaughtered there in order "that the departed master might have a charger in the spirit world to carry him on to fresh fields of victory. Placing the boots of a deceased officer across the saddle, with heels to the front, signifies that his march is ended. This mark of respect is not an army regulation but a custom which has been observed through a long period of history although there is no authentic record in the war department files as to when and where it originated.

Small Settlements Mark Vast Northwest Territory

Lying between the Arctic ocean and the northern boundaries of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the Northwest Territory accounts for more than a third of Canada's area. On its more than a million square miles live some 11,000 people, mostly Eskimos and Indians—an average of one person to 116 square miles. "Centers of population" in northern Canada signify trading posts, missions, police barracks, military stations and Eskimo and Indian villages.

Civilization has made Eskimos and Indians less inclined to volunteer their services, less receptive to pay for menial work. Some Eskimos have developed large-scale trading stations, and pay the Dominion government substantial income taxes. Eskimos are usually more friendly than Indians. Penetration of the white man has improved far-northern diets. The larger trading posts stock California canned fruits and tinned delicacies from England. Before the war fresh oranges and bananas were no longer regarded as curiosities.

From the highlands of the Stikine, Mackenzie, Ogilvie and Richardson ranges in the west, northern Canada levels off into an area which is the northern extension of the continent's great interior plain. Farther to the east are the broad stretches of the Laurentian Upland or Canadian Shield, a treeless tract broken by the wide expanse of Hudson bay. The breadth of this land belt is indicated by the fact that it includes five time zones. When it is 8 a. m. in the east it is only 4 a. m. in the west.

Seek to Boost Citric Oil Price With Concentrate

Citrus peel oil is in fair demand as a flavoring agent (its largest use is in beverages), but less oil is produced than could be: its recovery is more or less optional in canning operations for oranges and grapefruit. A way around the comparatively low price for orange oil ($1.40 to $1.75 per pound) has been sought by one Florida canner who makes a concentrated oil.

A 10 to 1 concentration removes most of the limonene, the terpene which constitutes about 90 per cent of orange oil and is largely responsible for its instability. The concentrate keeps better than the original oil, and the limonene finds application as a perfume or odor killer in cheap soaps.

In the industrial preparation of citrus juices, a main problem is to extract the maximum juice without including any of the bitter oil from the skin, the journal explains.

Cotton Electricity

The popular parlor magic effect of static electricity in causing the hair to stand on end on the head of a suitably charged subject standing on an insulating rubber mat is no joke when it is injected into the cotton ginning business, the department of agriculture points out. In areas where both cotton and air are very dry, static electricity is generated by the movement of the cotton through the gin. The effect is to clog the gin with balls of cotton; large lumps adhere to metal part; and the fire hazard goes past the danger point. The ginning machinery must be stopped and the electrified cotton cleaned out before operations can be resumed. When the lint cotton gets into the press it is so fluffy and resilient that it is often impossible to press it into a bale of the desired weight. Many remedies were tried by the Cotton Ginning Laboratory at Stoneville, Miss., including mechanical de-electrifying and moisture, but nothing proved satisfactory until a fine mist composed of water and sulphonated oil was introduced into the system.

Like Snow Suits

For playtime in cold weather, children like snowsuits better than any other type of garment. It doesn't make any difference whether they are "hand-me-downs" or "brand new," just so they are warm, durable and comfortable. A suit doesn't need to be made of a heavy material to be warm. Two or three layers of light-weight fabrics tightly woven and specially treated, will keep out wind, rain and snow. Be sure the trousers have extra width and length in the seat so that the child can stoop and bend easily. The legs, too, should be wide and bloused at the ankle over a tight cuff so the child can kneel and squat without difficulty. One-piece suits are best for the child from two to six years old. Then no matter how vigorous the play, the suit won't pull apart at the waist to let in cold air.

'Dust Dims Light

Sometimes a room hides its light not under a bushel but under layers of dust. Even a very thin film of dust can obscure considerable light, household management specialists say. If your home suddenly looks dim and gloomy, it may need a little extra dusting and polishing of all light centers, lamp bulbs and shades, mirrors and windows as well as all decorative objects. Dust often clings to volatile oil from cooking or smoke which has settled on light bulbs, windows and mirrors. Washing is usually a better way to remove greasy dust than dusting.

Northwest Retail Lumber and Building Material Dealers

Will Hold The Line!

The Northwestern Lumbermens Association, representing 2,7... retail lumber and building material dealers in the states of Minnes... Iowa, North and South Dakota, will hold the line against any inf... tionary spiral in prices on lumber and building materials, accord... to W. H. Badeux, Secretary.

A survey of the industry during the past week by the Assoc... tion has clearly indicated that farmers, veterans and the consum... public in the Northwest can be definitely assured by the retail lum... and building material industry that the line will be held.

The passing of OPA is a challenge not only to the good ju... ment of our industry, but to the patriotism of every retail lumber ... building material dealer in the Northwest. The survey just compl... ed among hundreds of our dealers, according to Badeaux, has def... itely indicated that holding the line is not only to our own interests ... for the good of the Northwest and the country generally.

The lumber and building material dealers of the Northwest ... respond to the challenge and see to it that there shall not be an inf... tionary spiral as far as lumber and building materials are concerned.

No Precedent Set For Flag Arrangement

If a new state, such as Hawaii or Alaska, should join the Union as frequently suggested, a new star, the 49th, would be added to the blue union of the United States flag the following July 4.

How the stars would be arranged is still a guess, for no precedent exists. When President Taft by executive order in 1912 established the first official arrangement for the stars, the National Geographic society points out, all 48 states were in the Union, and no provision was made for subsequent additions.

The law of June 14, 1777, establishing the flag, merely stated that it was to have 13 red and white stripes and a blue union with 13 white stars. No reference was made as to whether the stripes should be horizontal or vertical, and some early flags had vertical stripes. The law also failed to state the number of points the stars should have and the position they should occupy. Vermont was admitted to the Union in 1791 and Kentucky in 1792. Congress acceded to their demand for recognition by enacting a law on January 13, 1794, providing that after the first day of May, 1795, the United States flag should have 15 stripes and 15 stars. This was the flag which inspired Francis Scott Key to write "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Cadmium Recovered From Smelting of Zinc

Known since 1817, cadmium is rarely found alone. Usually it occurs in company with zinc, and is recovered in the smelting of zinc ore. The flue dust collecting on the cones of the retorts is mixed with coal, then distilled and redistilled until cadmium appears.

Normally, more than half the world's output was produced in the United States, domestic recovery reaching about 7½ million pounds in 1943, the latest year for which figures are available. Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Utah were credited with almost three-fourths of the total. Home production was not adequate for the year's needs of almost 8 million pounds. Reserve stocks filled the gap. Nine-tenths of the supply is used in electroplating and bearing alloys.

Chief world producers, apart from the United States, have been Mexico, Germany, Canada, South West Africa, Poland, Australia, Belgium and Norway. War keyed production to high figures in all zinc-smelting countries, and increased Canada's total in 1941 by 30 per cent. In prewar years the United States imported metallic cadmium, and exported compounds.

Peanut Butter

Peanut butter today is treated so that the oil won't separate easily. Improved techniques in the preparation of the peanut butter leave it less likely to get rancid and quality of peanuts used in butter are better. Grade one peanuts are blanched, roasted and ground with many variations in each process. The flavor of the butter depends largely on the degree of heat used and the length of time spent in roasting. The more the roasting, the deeper the color of the butter. People living on the east coast like their peanut butter a rich, dark brown. The farther west one lives the more likely he is to want his peanut butter light brown in color. Texture of peanut butter varies with the manufacturer. All varieties are on the market, from the kind that spreads as smoothly as butter to the crunchy kind.

Diving Mallards

Hunters are frequently surprised when wounded mallards and other ducks and geese known to be non-diving breeds, will escape under water in a power dive. The mallard is known as a puddle or tipper duck. Others in this group of shallow water feeders include pintails, gadwalls, teal and shovelers. During their youth as well as during their adult moulting season, the non-diving breeds are expert divers but once they reach maturity will never dive again except when wounded. A healthy adult mallard would starve to death in places where all of his feed is submerged a few feet beneath the water. Yet their juvenile ability to dive never deserts these so-called non-divers and enables them to escape their enemies when rendered flightless during their moulting season or when wounded.

More Cigarettes

From an annual average output of about 15 billion standard-sized cigarettes in 1911-1915, production rose to nearly 42 billion a year in the period 1916-1920 and continued steadily to increase until in 1940 it reached 189 billion. Reflecting the trend toward cigarettes, production of smoking and chewing tobacco and snuff decreased from an annual average of 457 million pounds in 1916-1920 to 344 million pounds in 1936-1940, while the output of cigars dropped from 7,364 millions in 1916-1920 to 5,185 millions in 1936-1940. So important is the cigarette division of the industry, however, that the total amount of tobacco leaf consumed in the manufacture of all tobacco products rose from an annual average of 650 million pounds in 1916-1920 to 763 million pounds in 1926-1930 and 879 million pounds in 1936-1940.

Mt. Eisenhower Towers In Southwest Alberta

Renaming of Canada's 9,000-foot Castle mountain in honor of General Eisenhower lengthens the list of peaks which have recently become natural monuments to distinguished war leaders. Canada had previously named three 9,500-foot peaks after Allied leaders, Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin. Colorado changed the name of one of its two Mount Wilsons to Mount Franklin Roosevelt.

Mount Eisenhower, notes the National Geographic society, lifts its bulky mass about half way between the famous resort centers of Lake Louise and Banff, in Banff National park, a 2,500-square mile slice of southwestern Alberta. The many-headed peak rises some two miles north of the Bow river, and its base extends eight miles along that stream. From its broad and rocky platform the mountain tapers upward into bold shapes that suggest in form the towers and battlements of an ancient castle. The sheer, bare sides rise 4,000 feet above the valley floor.

The region is studded with high peaks, eastern outposts of the continent's vast Rocky mountain system. Mountain climbing has become a recognized attraction. Swiss guides and pack trains make the ascents easier for novices. Mount Eisenhower was first climbed in 1884.

Negro Republic of Haiti Long Troubled

Haiti is no stranger to revolution. On-again-off-again internal strife began virtually with the establishment of this first Negro republic in 1820.

Gradually mounting, it reached a climax in 1911 and 1915. "Ballots by bullets!" brought no less than seven luckless presidents into office at the capital, Port-au-Prince, during those four years. Then the United States marines took the situation in hand. Haiti, smallest and most densely populated Western hemisphere republic, became a temporary ward of Uncle Sam.

Lying southeastward across strategic Windward Passage from Cuba, Haiti occupies the western third of Hispaniola, only island in the world which is the home of two sovereign nations. Haiti's share, fertile but largely mountainous, covers 10,748 square miles, nearly matching Maryland's area. On it, three million French-speaking Negro descendants of African slaves compose a farm state three times as populous as Maryland excluding Baltimore. In the eastern two-thirds of the island, the Dominican Republic is crowded enough with little more than half as many people, Spanish-speaking.

Vacuuming Edges

Why the edges of rugs or carpets often remain dirty after the vacuum cleaner has gone over the entire surface is a question that has perplexed many a housewife. This occurs when the nozzle of the machine has been allowed to go beyond the edge of the rug. In order to draw air and dirt up through the rug, the nozzle must be kept just inside the edge so that it forms a seal between machine and rug. If the nozzle runs over the edge the air rushes into the cleaner without going through the rug, and the part along the edge is not cleaned. Opposite tactics are in order, however, when the machine catches and lifts up rug edges or fringes. Then it is necessary to break the seal long enough to loosen them. An easy way to do this is to lower the handle just enough to tip the nozzle slightly. If fringes catch and wind around the rotating roll, shut off the motor immediately and loosen the fringe.

Blanket Warmth

The warmth of a blanket depends on the amount of wool in it, the nap and the closeness of weave. You can discover the amount of wool in a blanket by looking at the label. The greater the percentage of wool, the warmer the blanket. To know the weave of the blanket, unfold it and hold it up to the light. For warmth and wear, choose the blanket with a close and even weave. Next, look at the nap. Napping helps to make a blanket warm. It forms little air pockets to keep the cold out. A thick nap is good unless the fibers are napped so thickly that the filling yarns are weak. Another test for the nap is rubbing the blanket with the palm of your hand. If the nap rolls up and forms little balls of lint, the blanket probably is woven from short wool fibers. These short fibers cannot be anchored firmly in the foundation of the blanket.

Garfield's Death

Shortly after 9:30 a. m. Saturday, July 1, 1881, President Garfield, about to leave the capital for the week-end, was walking with Secretary of State James G. Blaine on the platform of the Baltimore and Potomac depot at 6th and B streets, N.W., Washington, D. C. Charles J. Guiteau, a disappointed office seeker, fired two shots, both of which struck the President. Until September 6 he was nursed at the White House, then was removed by special train to Elberon, N. J., a family summer resort. There he died September 19. His body lay in state in the Capitol in Washington, then was taken to Cleveland, Ohio, for burial. Guiteau was convicted and was hanged in Washington, June 3, 1882.

Electric iron efficiency is determined by the size of the ironing surface and the amount of heat generated, not the weight of the iron.

Some 500 stations on the railroads of Great Britain are competing for cash prizes for the most colorful and best-kept garden plots. During the war these gardens were employed for raising much-needed vegtables.

Pressure groups are nothing new

Among the earliest "pressure groups" recorded in ancient history, were the legionaires (or soldiers) of the Roman Empire. Rome had somewhat of a Republican form of government at that time and The Laws of The Land were made by the Senators of Rome.

The Legionaires "elected" their officers who dealt with the Senators of the Roman Government; they forced higher and higher wages and more and more special privileges at the expense of the government, and ordered less and less work.

Government officials became so cravenly afraid of the legionaires that they gave in at every show of force.

Just to the north of Rome were Free Men called Goths, who believed that you have to work for what you get. By hard work they gained strength, and built superior weapons.

When they overran the legionaires of Rome, abolished all their privileges, and enslaved them.

The trouble was that the Roman public was enslaved too.

The Roman Public had been stupidly standing by, saying "What can I do?" while the government sold its soul to this minority pressure group.

BAUKAGE DISCUSSES OLD 1944 'FIGHT'

Reads Right Meaning Into Barkley's Break With FDR

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Continually I encounter evidence of the importance of semantics, as I have mentioned before in this column—the importance of words, of their meanings, and of the necessity that the meaning in which the speaker or writer uses them is the same attached to them by the listener or reader.

Baukhage

A few days ago I received a letter from a listener lamenting what she called "one of our greatest troubles today"—lack of faith in our leaders.

She then described her "consternation" when she heard Senator Barkley's "gushing and flowery talk" nominating Franklin Roosevelt for President in 1944, after hearing the senator's famous "revolt" speech sharply criticizing the President's veto message in the tax bill the previous February.

To Washington, there was nothing inconsistent in those two performances at all. What happened was this: two persons who had worked together in a common cause fell out. Amends were made, and still loyal to that cause, the man who had been affronted registered his complaint, and then, feeling that the virtue of his position had been recognized, took up his labors in the common cause again.

Perhaps that explanation would satisfy my disillusioned listener, had it not been for the fact that she not only misinterpreted the significance of Senator Barkley's speech, but actually put into his mouth words that he didn't use.

She said that Barkley had said that the President was dishonest, and that he (Mr. Roosevelt) knew he was dishonest.

Now, by interesting coincidence, something had recalled that speech of Mr. Barkley's to my attention only a day or so before I received the letter.

A loyal toiler in the Democratic party had remarked to me that the senator from Kentucky, having served as majority leader longer than any man who has held that job in the senate, had increased tremendously in stature in the eyes of supporters and opponents. And, my friend explained, it was his "revolt" of February 23, 1944, which marked the moment when Barkley began to wax in the favor of opponent and supporter alike!

As a result of the coincidence—the letter and the remarks of my friend—I reread the revolt speech.

Nowhere in it did Senator Barkley accuse the President of being dishonest. But it is easy to see how a listener might have missed the shades of meaning in the speaker's words. However, those words, correctly interpreted, I feel certain, reflected precisely the feeling of the senator. Had he wished to go further, he could easily have done so.

Resent Personal Slap at Congress

There were two especially sharp passages in Barkley's talk. The President had charged in his message (vetoing the tax bill) that "it is squarely the fault of the congress of the United States in using language in drafting the law which not even a dictionary or a thesaurus can make clear."

There was a biting, personal flavor in that sentence which congress as a whole, and Barkley individually and as majority leader, could not help resenting.

Barkley said: "If it (the above statement) was made by anybody who ever sat in a tax committee meeting, it was a deliberate and unjustified mis-statement in order to place upon congress the blame for universal dissatisfaction with tax complexities and in order to produce the illusion that the executive departments have in vain protested against this complexity."

Here one can see that Barkley is defending the integrity of the congress. He did not spare his anger at the affront. But, since he knew FDR had never sat in a tax committee meeting, he wasn't placing the onus entirely on the President.

There was one other sharp riposte in which Barkley came still nearer to making, but did not actually make, the "dishonesty" charge.

He said the President used a method of calculation "which obviously was handed to him by a mind more clever than honest."

It was natural to assume that some White House advisor had produced the data, and in all likelihood, that some literary aide had written the veto message. Indeed, one of the columnists omnisciently announced at the time that it was the work of Judge Rosenman.

As a matter of fact, I can state with absolute certainty that that was one of the few speeches which President Roosevelt, who was good and mad because congress had refused to give him the tax bill he wanted, wrote himself, inditing the entire philippic with his own hand.

Whether Senator Barkley would have replied with greater or less vigor had he known the actual authorship, I do not know. The fact remains, however, that he said what he meant and meant what he said. Nowhere did he call the President dishonest. He did establish his own independence, and that of congress, and probably did the President a favor by warning him against allowing his emotions to get the better of him.

In Barkley's delivery of the speech, and his nomination of President Roosevelt less than six months later, there was nothing inconsistent. Certainly nothing which, when understood, should shake the public's faith in the public man.

Brakes Save Mr. Truman

Very little publicity was given to something that almost happened the day Secretary of State Byrnes departed for the foreign ministers conference in Paris. Something which might have given us a new President.

Mr. Truman, in order to emphasize the importance of the mission, rode with Mr. Byrnes to the airport to see the delegation off. There was no motorcycle escort, and while the car was moving along Constitution avenue at a fair speed, there came very near to being re-enacted an accident similar to that which cost General Patton his life. A truck dashed out of a side street toward the official automobile. Fortunately the brakes of the Presidential car held. The party had a bad shake-up, but that was all.

It might have been otherwise. The newly appointed and not over popular Secretary of the Treasury Snyder might have had to move next door. After the secretary of state, who shared the near-miss with the President, the secretary of the treasury is next in line of succession.

This is not the first time Mr. Truman has taken risks. But he is by no means the only President who has worried Secret Service men to whose care the lives of the Chief Executives are entrusted under the law.

Three times, newsmen, trying to keep up with Presidents, have been in serious automobile accidents.

A certain amount of speed is desired at times when a presidential party is passing through strange territory but, as a rule, the White House chauffeurs who are specially picked men, "loaned" by the army, if left by themselves, lean to the safe and not the sorry side.

At least one President was forced to change his automobile habits. President Hoover had a fishing lodge at Rapidan in Virginia, some 85 miles from the Capital. Hoover believed that time was money. He was always a hard worker, and when he'd finished fishing, he wanted to get away from there and back to his desk. It was a job for the Secret Service men and newsmen to keep up and keep on the road.

Those mad chases were the subject of considerable conversation by the correspondents and also their wives. It was not considered a choice assignment. Finally there was a bad accident that sent one reporter to the hospital.

After that, the presidential car proceeded at a more normal pace.

The Alexander Hamilton institute says savings during 1946 will be considerably lower than last year's. Fine, if it reduces inflation pressures; but if it goes too far and the consumer doesn't consume, the producer can't produce, and we are back to 1929 once more.

When Japs Strike They Take Over Plant Profits

JAPAN:
Laborers Strike

Japan's new democracy is bringing strikes to many manufacturing plants. But even in labor trouble the Japanese give an Oriental twist to their methods.

In 26 of the larger industrial plants in Japan the laborers have struck. But instead of quitting their jobs and forming a picket line, the workers have merely tossed out all management personnel taken over the entire operation and will pocket whatever profits are made!

HOUSES:
To Be Prefabricated

Prefabrication today, according to Walter Harnischfeger, Wisconsin manufacturer, "is one of the new basic industries in the country." Word comes from Washington and other lumber - producing states, too, that plants to build prefabricated houses are increasing steadily. Several plants are reported operating in the New England states. Harnischfeger estimates that from 8 to 10 per cent of ordinary building costs can be saved by prefabrication.

It is estimated that a builder can erect two or three prefabricated houses in the time required to build a conventional house. With a crew of four men, the builder can get a new house under roof in less than two days, according to Harnischfeger.

BUYERS:
Go on Strike

When prices get too high, the public won't buy. For instance, when controls were removed from strawberry preserves they jumped to $6 a dozen jars wholesale, but the shoppers wouldn't buy them at that price and they declined to $4 a dozen.

A large food company noted a type of buyers' strike in the fresh fruit and vegetable market. The price of such items as plums, potatoes, cherries, cantaloupes, lettuce and other fresh produce appear to have gotten "too steep," a company official stated, with the result that sales of these items fell off sharply.

POULTRY:
Cull Half Goal

Poultry producers culled their flocks of about 28,000,000 birds in May and accomplished half of the culling urged by the department of agriculture as a national goal during May and June.

The 55,000,000 culling program, urged early in May, is an attempt to rid the nation's flocks of low producing birds and reduce poultry production in line with reduced feed stocks, officials said. Last year, producers reduced their flocks by 40,000,000 birds in May and June.

1946 MEAT:
People Eat More

At least 3,000,000 more pounds of meat and meat products would be consumed, if available, by the American public this year, according to R. C. Pollock, general manager of the national live stock and meat board.

Official estimates point to a per capita meat supply of 145 to 150 pounds in 1946. While this is larger than prewar consumption, the public would buy from 165 to 170 pounds per capita, according to Pollock. He attributed the demand to greater buying power, increasing interest in better nutrition, and a growing appreciation of meat in an adequate diet.

SEWING MACHINES:
Maybe Next Year

There is doubt that the demand for sewing machines can be met before 1947, in the opinion of Sir Douglas Alexander, president of the Singer company. His company will not reach production before the end of 1946, he declares.

The Singer factory at Bonnifres, France, was seriously damaged during the war and will not be able to supply the French market for some time. The company's German factory has been taken over by the Russians, and the Italian plant is having labor trouble. Only the Singer plants in England, Canada and the United States will get into full production this year.

POTATOES:
California Crop

Department of agriculture official forecasts indicate that California potato growers will produce a superbumper early crop of more than 30,000,000 bushels and achieve the biggest acre yield on record.

California was expected by the department to turn out nearly three times as many potatoes as New Jersey, second ranking early producer. California's average yield is expected to be 370 bushels per acre. The nearest rival to that mark was expected to be Nebraska with 210 bushels per acre.

POLITICS . . . Mrs. Olive Remington Goldman, Chicago, is a candidate for the house of representatives. A speech instructor at the University of Illinois, she is the mother of four children.

PAY MORTGAGES

Farm Debts Lowest Since 1915

WASHINGTON.—American farmers are getting out of debt at the most amazing rate in the history of this nation. The department of agriculture has reported that the United States' farm mortgage debt dropped this year to the lowest level since 1915.

The total debt was estimated to have been approximately $5,081,000,000 on January 1 or less than half the record high of $10,786,000,000 set back in 1923.

A department statement said the debt had decreased $1,500,000,000 or 23 per cent since 1940. This reduction is in sharp contrast, it pointed out, with developments during and after World War I, when farm mortgage indebtedness increased 43 per cent from 1915 to 1919.

The department said, however, that developments during 1945 suggest strongly that the long cycle of decreasing mortgage indebtedness which has been under way since 1923 is now approaching its end."

"During 1945," the department said, "the net reduction in debt was about $190,000,000, or less than one-half of the average annual reduction that occurred in the two preceding years. In addition to the slower rate of decline in the U. S. total, there were 20 states in which indebtedness showed an increase for the year as compared with eight states showing an increase in the preceding year."

No prediction of prospects of further reducing the debt was given. Many farmers may find it necessary to purchase additional farm machinery and other equipment in 1946 or 1947. While much of this might be paid for with savings, some additional debt might be expected. Likewise, numerous returned veterans will go into debt for farms of their own.

FAMOUS LITTLE TOWN

Askov, Minnesota, Known as 'Rutabaga' Capital of U.S.

By E. L. KIRKPATRICK
WNU Features.

There are numerous capitols of America, including National at Washington, "Swiss Cheese" at Monroe, Wis., and "Rutabaga" at Askov, Minn. Last named is smallest of these but its work in the field it represents is plenty heavy on per capita population basis.

Picture a town of 300 people around which is grown and through which is marketed 400 carloads of rutabagas per year. Most farmers in the community grow at least a half acre; some as many as 40 acres, depending on the prospective market. Eight tons per acre is a good yield. Price sometimes goes to $40 a ton, but is more likely to be around $20.

Rutabagas fit well in the community's dairy farming rotation, soil variations and family unit farming. They thrive in soil too heavy for potatoes, and farmers who are growing them say, "you can't beat 'bagas for a cash crop." So well is the crop liked that, before the war, Askov staged annual rutabaga festivals, which likely will be resumed this year.

Also a Co-Op Capitol.

In addition to rutabagas Askov makes a strong bid for U. S. "Co-Op Capitol." Among the active local groups are Co-Operative Creamery association, handling whole milk and making Land O' Lakes butter; Askov Co-Operative association, selling flour, feed and seeds; Pine Co-Op Oil association (centered in Askov with three sub-stations in neighboring villages), selling gasoline, oil, hardware and appliances; Askov Livestock Shipping association, trucking livestock to South St. Paul; Federated Co-Op Trucking association, hauling agricultural products and supplies; and Co-Operative Mercantile association, operating a grocery store.

There are still other groups, such as the Askov Buying club, organized by the high school students to purchase supplies for their own use; the Askov Co-Op guild, acting as a discussion club, and meat rings furnishing fresh beef, direct from local farms to members, weekly.

All Community Shares.

Both farmers and townsmen are shareholders in all of the co-ops except the creamery, feed store and trucking groups which deal strictly with agricultural products and supplies. Many retired farmers in town still hold shares in several of these enterprises and take an active part in the meetings. Askov has a marked interdependency between townsmen and farmers in business, social activities, family ties, school, and the one church, Danish Lutheran.

This interdependency, as well as the habit of co-operation, dates from the start of the Askov community by families from the Danish People's society of America who just 40 years ago looked for and found a home where they might live and prosper. Together they have co-operated and prospered, making their community stand out in more ways than one as a "capitol."

Plane Keeps 'em on Farm

The private airplane should help to stop the decline of our farm population, believes Harry Woodhead, president of Consolidated Vultee. He points out, for one thing, that farm boys are going to have an advantage over most city boys in readier access to the use of a plane. This fact should keep many young fellows at home. Their sisters will be able to get an order delivered by air express from a catalogue in two days — as fast as most city folks can get a delivery from a local department store. That will help farm life, too. Equally important, the plane will put the city and distant friends in easy reach of every farmer's family — it will add an entirely new social dimension to rural living.

CAA NOTES

CAA Administrator J. P. Wright has estimated that flying activities are now more than 1,000 per cent above the 1935 status. Air traffic congestion at city airports has already reached alarming proportions. . . Registration of aircraft will be up to date by July 1, and fast service will be provided for aircraft purchasers and finance companies thereafter, says F. M. Lanter. . . . But club ownership of an airplane introduces new headaches for all concerned, particularly if the plane is mortgaged. . . Private enterprise will construct many new airports before the federal funds get into the hands of cities.

Planes for Harvesting

"I fly ahead, spot fields of ripening wheat, land and make deals with farmers, fly back, see how the work is coming along, take repair parts to distant towns where I learn by long distance that spare parts can be had. My plane has saved a lot of bread," recently declared Gene McGill of Avard, Okla., president of the National Flying Farmers association.

NEBRASKA LEARNS TO FLY

All over Nebraska farm folk are learning to fly. Out near the Colorado border in Chase county, population about 5,000, enrollees in flying courses number 125, and the majority are from farm families. There are few flying services in the state that do not have 25 students or more. F. G. Fuelberth, Wayne, has more than 100 logbooks out. D. W. Bair, Bradshaw, who spent three years training pilots for the army, now has 30 students who take turns at receiving instruction.

Herbert Graf, stage director of the New York Metropolitan Opera house, as the "basic art form for the new American opera."

Over 200 in Company.

As staged by Sam Selden, head of the University of North Carolina dramatic school, "Lost Colony" is sheer spectacle. A company of 200 is employed, and they play on a stage where scenes are shifted by strong spotlights which effectually black-out all but the playing scenes. A narrator, mounted in a cupola on the side, keeps the action moving in the brief interludes, and the Westminster choir and the organ provide a most impressive background. With the new shifting facilities, the lights will play upon the waters of the sound and bring spectacular realism to the presentation.

Paul Green's story of the "Lost Colony" is an historical rendering of his version of the fate of the colonists. But it has within it all the elements of romance, of strife, of tender passion, of final tragedy in a new land. It starts with the historical landing of the colonists and their establishment of a new homeplace in cabins around the chapel in which they give thanks to Providence for a new life. It proceeds with the little things which go into the making of homes, and a nation, and to the birth of Virginia Daré, first new life in a new world.

Finale is Tragic.

Mysteriously, the brother of Chief Wanchese is killed; the Indians become hostile, and the tragic finale of the "Lost Colony" plays itself out in mystery. But the dramatist's epilogue, rampant with stirring lines and inspiring music, leaves no doubt that the colony was really the beginning of a new nation, of America.

Paul Green wrote "Lost Colony" as his contribution to the culture of his home state. He presented it, in toto, to the people of the Virginia Dare country, and received no royalty from its production, nor has he allowed rights to any dramatic or cinema companies. The entire performance was broadcast by the Columbia Broadcasting company in 1939, and the author has prepared a book on the text which is on general sale.

FDR Saw It.

First presentations were sponsored and managed by the Roanoke island historical society, a local group organized to take care of the multitudinous details of the actual staging. In five years, almost a half-million spectators, among them President and Mrs. Roosevelt and Lord Halifax, brought an estimated $3,000,000 in total revenue to the Island of Roanoke and the Dare country. As it begins its new, "perpetual" series of seasons, the books of the organizations are evenly balanced.

The new association, headed by former Gov. J. Melville Boughton and operating under especially enacted laws of the North Carolina state assembly, presented the opus through a five-man committee, all of whom reside in Manteo, near Fort Raleigh, scene of the production, during the season. Melvin R. Daniels is chairman of the committee, which is composed of I. P. Davis, secretary, C. S. Meekins, treasurer, Theodore S. Meekins and D. Selden, the director.

Bait That Looks and Smells Like Shrimp

LEANS. — Frank W. this city has used his to the point of genius n artificial bait or lure His idea has resulted ing of natural-looking plastic. The plastic ollow and in addition d similarity will carry perfume and flavor of having their perfor- ed with either shrimp meat or powdered dried shrimp.

Counterfeit shrimp have been made and sold before, but Mr. Manning's idea of a hollow shrimp, the body of which unscrews in the middle and provides for a generous-sized piece of shrimp or a filling of odorous dried shrimp meal, is something new. This feature and the perforated body, which allows the flavor and effluvium of the real article to leak out and leave a trail in the water, was, of course, the feature on which patents were granted to the inventor.

The new lure, which is not yet in production but which, we are told, has been tried and found not wanting in actual fishing practice, is expected to be placed on the market before long and with the price of shrimp what it is at the present time it would seem, if the fish like them as it is hoped that they will, that the new lures will be in the nature of a real boon to mankind.

JESUS AND SUPREME LOYALTY TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:3-6; Joshua 24:16, 22-24; Luke 14:25-27.

MEMORY SELECTION—No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.—Matthew 6:24.

The first three commandments bring man into the presence of God, where he is taught how to worship God in spirit and in truth.

"The first commandment (Exod. 20:3) bids us worship God exclusively; the second (vv. 4-6) bids us worship him spiritually. The first commandment forbids us to worship false gods; the second forbids us to worship the true God under false forms" (Farrar).

We shall lose much of the value of our lesson if we confine the application of it to Israel. We miss the point if we think only of the gods of wood and stone which the heathen worship and fail to apply the truth to any and all idol worship of our day.

The loyalty to God of which our lesson text teaches may be summarized in four words. It is a loyalty of

I. Purpose (Exod. 20:3).

Jehovah means, "I will be what I will be," or "I am that I am," (Exod. 3:14). His very name declares God to be the self-existent, eternal one. How infinitely gracious then is the use of the word "thy" in Exodus 10:2! He—the great I AM—is my God, a personal God. It must be our constant purpose to worship him only.

There are many things concerning which we do not speak dogmatically. There are even Christian doctrines about which spiritual and earnest men may honestly differ, but regarding God we say with absolute assurance and complete exclusiveness—there is but one true God. If he is what he claims to be, if God is not to be declared to be a liar, then it is beyond the realm of possibility that there could be any other God.

Hear it, men and women of America who in an enlightened land and age bow down in heathenish worship "before the god of gold, the god of self, the god of wine, the god of success, the god of fame, the goddess of pleasure, the god of licentiousness." The one true god says, "I am Jehovah. . . . Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

II. Performance (Exod. 20:4-6).

What is in the heart must show in the life. The second commandment calls for the undivided devotion and worship of man. It expressly forbids idolatry in any form. The injunction is twofold. (1) Men are forbidden to make any material likeness which to them represents a being to be worshiped. It matters not whether it be an image of what men believe God to be like, or the image of an angelic being, a heavenly body, in fact, "anything that is in the heaven above," or on the earth, such as a man or animal; or under the water, such as a fish. (2) If such objects have been made either by ourselves or others we may not bow down to them, nor render any service to them. Let us all examine our religious ceremonies and practices in the light of God's commandment.

Observe that obedience to this command brings rich blessing to "thousands" (v. 6), whereas disobedience is a curse not only to the man who disobeys, but also to his descendants.

III. Promise (Josh. 24:16, 22-24).

Before the aged leader of Israel came to the close of his life he called leaders of the people, whom he had led in the taking of the Promised Land, and urged them to continue in the way of faith and loyalty to God.

They promised rather readily, but he made clear to them that God was not interested in lip service. They were to prove their promi- by putting away all strang- This they agreed to do they failed, they s- -ut, and wherein - promise, God - . We may learn fr experience.

IV. - Luke 14:25-27).

It is not always necessary to choose between our natural affections for those near to us and our loyalty to Christ, but if the time comes for that decision, Christ must come first without question and without hesitation (cf. Matt. 10:37).

The word "hate" (v. 26) does not carry with it any thought of malice or personal dislike. We know from other scriptures that we are to honor our father and our mother (Exod. 20:12). The one who fails his own is declared to be worse than an infidel (I Tim. 5:8).

The point is that no personal loyalty or responsibility is to stand in the way of our devotion to Christ. Our own lives must be counted as a glad sacrifice to him as we take up our cross—in the crucifixion of self-will and devotion to his will (see Gal. 2:20: 6:14).

THE BIG INCH

In the early days of the war, the shortage of gasoline all but ended the driving of passenger cars in the eastern states. Construction of the world's largest and longest pipe line was rushed to completion so that crude petroleum from the vast fields of Texas could be moved quickly to the refineries of the Atlantic seaboard.

The huge tube, 24 inches in diameter, originated at Longview, Texas, in the heart of the great East Texas pools. Its terminus is at the refinery center of Phoenixville, Penn. Even in the blue-print stage, the famous pipe line was known as the "Big Inch."

Shortly after the Big Inch began to thrust its way northeastward, a second line, to transport gasoline, was begun at Baytown, Texas. It is 16 inches in diameter from Baytown to Port Neches. Thence, to its Pennsylvania terminus, its diameter is 20 inches. This smaller line is affectionately termed the "Little Big Inch."

In the early days, pipe lines rarely exceeded 6 or 8 inches in diameter. Lines from 10 inches upwards were always referred to as "big inch." Today, the term is applied to any pipe measuring more than 14 inches in diameter.

Therefore, since both the new Texas - Pennsylvania pipe lines are actually "big inch" lines, it became necessary to distinguish between them. The 24-inch line, then, became officially THE "Big Inch." And the smaller (though small only by comparison) quite naturally, and not at all illogically, received the picturesque and descriptive name, "Little Big Inch."

LAND BOOM MEANS STORING DYNAMITE

Murray Urges "Continue To Save, Pay Debts"

Iowa farm families this week were urged to continue their program of earmarking savings for farm and home improvements rather than to sink the money in land at inflated values.

W. G. Murray, head of the Department of Economics and Sociology at Iowa State College, pointed out that the ending of price controls has allowed farm prices to shot upward. These rising prices could excite farmers and speculators alike to start a wild scramble for land, resulting in a disastrous land boom similar to the one in 1919 and 1920.

Home Improvements

Murray expressed hope and confidence, however, that Iowa continue to pay off their debts farmers and their families would and lay away savings for the "rainy days" ahead.

"We are all aware," he said, "of the many improvements needed in farm homes alone. Only one out of five homes has running water. Houses need to be repaired; many enlarged. Because of labor and material shortages, much of this work connot be done this year. But if the savings are set aside for that purpose, these improvements can be made when materials and labor do become available."

Education

Along with needed home improvements, many farm families are putting money away for the education of their children. They are planning home ground improvements. Travel is becoming more a part of the farm family budget.

Murray emphasized that it will take money to fulfill these plans for better farm living. And that money will not be available if it is tied up in expensive farm land. While paying cash for a farm is safer than incuring a heavy mortage debt, the money still is tied up and can't be used for those things that give a more comfortable life.

Keep "Heads"

Pointing out that land prices already have gone up 60 percent over prewar levels, Murray said farmers would gain that most if this proved to be the high level point.

"If we are able to avoid a land boom, followed by a bust, farmers may expect a considerable period of relative farm prosperity," he said.

"If we lose our heads and go on a land buying spree in an effort to make big money in a hurry, this prosperity will be hectic, and short-lived. We'll be paying for our folly for years to come."

Hancock County Budget For 1946-7, Higher

Urge Care In Handling New Grain Crops

Hancock County farmers were reminded this week that small grain is too expensive to be wasted through improper storage.

County Extension Director Paul Henderson urged farmers to make sure their grain is dry enough to store safely and to check the condition of their grain bins.

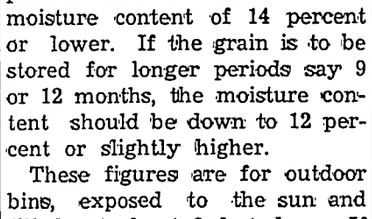
Henderson says reports from Iowa State College agricultural engineers show that small grain can be stored safely for short periods of 1 to 3 months with a moisture content of 14 percent or lower. If the grain is to be stored for longer periods say 9 or 12 months, the moisture content should be down to 12 percent or slightly higher.

These figures are for outdoor bins, exposed to the sun and filled at least 8 feet deep. If the bin is shaded and the grain is not over 4 feet deep, the moisture content can be slightly higher.

Farmers who feel that a load of grain may have a high moisture content should keep this grain separate until a moisture test can be made at the local elevator. If the moisture is too high for safe storage, the grain can be spread out in a thin layer in the crib driveway or some other sheltered place until it has dried.

The agricultural engineers also point out the need for repairing the grain bins before harvest starts. Rain leaking or blowing into the grain will cause spoilage. In outdoor cribs moisture leakage often occurs between the floor and sidewalls, especially when the floor extends out past the walls.

If there has been trouble in the past with insects in the bin, all the old grain should be throughly cleaned out and the interior sprayed with a 3 to 5 percent DDT solution.



HELLO, FOLKS!

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Eckels of Minneapolis, Minn., are the parents of a baby boy. Mrs. Eckels, before her marriage was Miss Mavis Nuehring.

Give to the Salvation Army.

The Hancock county board of supervisors will hold a hearing on the county budget for 1947 at the courthouse in Garner July 22 at 10 a. m.

The budget of 1947 calls for a general tax levy in the sum of $255,000 which is an increase of $24, 000 over 1946 when a total of $221,000 was levied for the various funds.

The increase is mainly in the road funds with budget requirements being increased $48,000 over 1946. A decrease of $20.000 in the poor fund and $4,000 in the state institution fund was listed, chiefly because of large balances in these 2 funds.

Largest single item on the budget is the levy of $112,000 in the road maintenance fund which is an increase over the past year, the second largest levy being the general county fund which is $75,000, the same as last year.

Proposed expenditures for 1947 are $566,300 as compared to $529, 900 last year. The estimated unencumbered balance as of Jan. 1, 1947, is $184,300, and the estimated income other than taxation is listed at $127,000.

ONE REASON MEAT COSTS ARE UP, NO SUBSIDIES

Farm Bureau Spokesman:-

One of the most important factors contributing to the increase in the price of meat is that Uncle Sam is no longer paying part of the consumer's food bill says H. S. Nicol head of the Iowa Farm Bureau Livestock Department.

Nicol points out that the government subsidy amounted to $1.70 per hundred on live hogs and from $1.25 to $3.00 on live cattle. The consumer received the benefit of practially all of subsidy payments. Since the death of O. P. A. these subsidy payments have been removed.

He points out that the money which was used for subsidy payments came from the taxpayer's pockets. However, there were many of them who didn't know it, which is the reason many people are now complaining about so-called higher prices, Nicol declares.

Yoicks, Harriet Sue (secretary, stenographer and runner up for the 1937 Miss Yonkers award): Private secretary to Artemus G. Bilge, prominent business man and baseball addict, at no time did you ever meet the telephonic inquiry, "Is Mr. Bilge in?" with the reply, "Who is calling him?" This makes you an unique and extraordinary character. But above that it can be said that neither did you ever get the caller's name and then reply quickly, "Mr. Bilge is in Indo-China for the week-end." Have a degree with ice cream on top.

HARD TO GET

I told the man I'd like to get
A little harmony;
He said: "The ceilings are too low;
Production isn't free";
I asked about some world accord,
Prepared or in the rough;
He shrugged his shoulders and replied,
"We just can't get the stuff."

"What are my chances for some peace?"
I asked him with a sigh;
"The trouble is," he answered me,
"Demand exceeds supply";
"We need some trustfulness," I said
"And honesty true blue";
He said, "It's awful hard to get,
Not much is coming through."

"Is tolerance yet coming through?
How's patience and restraint?"
"Production should be good," he said,
"But just the same it ain't."
Of milk of human kindness I
Next made an inquiry,
But got the word I'd have to have
A high priority.

The Bare Fact

Private Jones had been ordered report at the M. O.'s surgery for a minor nose operation.

"Go into the other room," said the M. O. when Jones appeared, "and take off all your clothes."

"What!" protested Jones. "Take off all my clothes just for a nose treatment? Is that necessary?"

"Do as you are told; and don't ask questions!" barked the M. O.

"Yes, sir," answered Jones, and went into the next room. "I don't understand it," Jones remarked to another man in the room with him. "All I need is nose treatment and he makes me take off all my clothes."

"That's nothing," replied the unclad stranger, "he ordered me to do the same thing, and all I came here to deliver a package."

The Polish underground kept track of the altar, reporting its whereabouts to Professor Estreicher who had gone to London. There came the all-out raid on Nuernberg and Poles waited anxiously to know whether the altar had been destroyed as the castle above it had been. The tunnel had been a safe place and the Wit Stwosz work was unharmed.

Last October, Lt. Frank Albright of the monuments and fine arts division of military government, and a former professor of archeology at Johns Hopkins, began supervising, with the help of Professor Estreicher, the long task of preparing the altar for shipment to Poland.

But I wore an American uniform, and that was enough to include me in the little group on whom the Polish people lavished their gratitude I was handed bouquets of flowers The children clapped and cheered as I walked by. JESUS AND TRUE WORSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 8:11-14, 18-20. Isaiah 40:30, 31; Mark 12:28-34.
MEMORY SELECTION — God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship in spirit and truth.—John 4:24.

The one true God is worthy of the wholehearted worship of all men. The second commandment, which we studied last week, forbids all and every idolatry and thus requires exclusive worship of God.

It really means something in the life of a man to worship God in sincerity and truth. It makes life worthwhile both here and hereafter.

I. Worship Balances Life (Deut. 8:11-14).

Prosperity is usually thought to be a blessing. We fear depression and poverty. The Lord through Moses warned his people that prosperity was dangerous. It still is, because material things have the power to so satisfy the natural desires of man as to make him forget his spiritual needs.

Is it not true that material prosperity usually brings with it a corresponding decrease in spirituality. Life values are weighed in gold, silver, wheat and iron instead of being viewed in the light of God's Word.

Worship of God will balance life for it will keep man from forgetting God and his laws. In the wilderness Israel had to call on God for daily bread. Now that they were to come into the promised land they would be apt to think they produced their own food.

II. Worship Protects Life (Deut. 8:18-20).

One of the most mischievous mistakes of life is the idea that man is the maker of his own money. Only God can give man the power of hand and heart, of muscle and mind, which brings forth wealth, and then he can only draw it out of God's resources in mine or field or sea.

This fallacy of man leads him astray, and he begins to worship the very powers he uses and finds pleasure in the gods of this world. That way leads only to eternal destruction, to spiritual death.

How is man to be delivered from this awful destructive force? By a right relationship to God, by worship of and devotion to the Lord.

Israel had a covenant with God, and in the keeping of it they would find deliverance from all which would pull down and destroy—yes, and from the judgment of God (v. 20).

We who are believers in Christ are under the new covenant of grace. If we have been born again we have the promise of God that we have eternal life. But let us be clear that it is possible for a Christian to so forget God and his covenant with the Lord as to lose his fellowship and joy, and to be useless and fruitless.

III. Worship Strengthens Life (Isa. 40:30, 31).

The Christian life is not an easy one to live. After all, who wants it easy? There is, however, full provision by God for the power needed to live a life as victorious and exultant as that of the soaring eagle. That power is for those who "wait upon the Lord" (v. 31).

It is taken for granted that those who are old may become weary and faint, but the fact is that even the youth have this disappointing experience.

We, leaders in the church and parents, are apt to forget that youth is often a time of great struggle. The young man or woman must make the choices of purposes and ideals which will determine their future. Too often youth, left unguided and without the balance of a real faith in God, makes the wrong choices and winds up in bitter disappointment.

Only God is sufficient for the need of our young people but he is sufficient. Let us teach our boys and girls to wait on the Lord.

IV. Worship Completes Life (Mark 12:28-34).

Here was a man, who, by the testimony of Jesus was "not far from the kingdom of God." He was very near to a full devotion to God in Christ. He knew "all the answers," but he did not follow the teaching which he knew to its proper and blessed conclusion.

It is terrifying to think how close a man can come to entering into eternal life, and yet miss it altogether. It prompts the writer of these notes to ask you, the reader, very earnestly, Have you entered into eternal life through Jesus Christ? "Almost" will not avail; you can be almost saved—and eternally lost.

The true nature of worship is revealed in this lesson as a loving dependence on God at all times and in all circumstances. We recognize him as the one who can supply our every need, spiritual and temporal. We accord to him quick and full obedience. We find in him such complete satisfaction that we cannot withhold our love and his love from our fellow men. We worship him!

Sportlight by Grantland Rice

A SHORT while ago, we were roaming the Cleveland landscape with a pretty fair old-timer. He was, and is, the Gray Eagle—only a trifle grayer than he used to be. The name is Speaker — Tris Speaker — the kid who came up from Hubbard City, Tex., nearly 40 years ago to become one of the great ballplayers of all time, both as an out-fielding hawk and a hitter, a hitter good enough to keep Ty Cobb from leading the league 13 consecutive years.

Tris Speaker

Tris Speaker won or saved many a ball game with his brilliant fielding and his hard hitting. But he willingly agrees that when it comes to a winning percentage, the star pitcher is the winning factor.

"Walter Johnson," Speaker said, "won 20 or more games a year over a period of 10 consecutive years with a club that without him probably would have been mired in the second division. His average was about 200 or maybe 300 per cent above his team's average. Washington without Johnson was a pushover. Washington with Johnson pitching was harder to beat than any team in the league, including the Athletics, Tigers or the Red Sox. It's the same, today, when Newhouser, Feller and Chandler are working.

"The Red Sox also have great pitchers, but they have a great team to back them up. What makes them so strong, at this point anyway, is that in addition to a fine ball club they also have the pitching. That makes it tough for any challenger. Great pitchers such as Ed Walsh, Nick Altrock and Doc White have carried weak-hitting teams to a pennant and a world's championship, as this trio did in 1906, but no set of hitters and fielders ever have carried weak pitchers anywhere out of the second division."

All that is needed is to look over the individual pitching averages of Hal Newhouser of the Tigers, Bob Feller of the Indians and Spud Chandler of the Yankees and compare them with the averages of their teams in the standing of the clubs. These three men have kept on winning in spite of weak batting support at times.

You've heard more than a little about the famous Gas House gang of St. Louis around 1934. They had their full share of good ball-players, but it was Dizzy Dean who pitched them into a pennant — without Dizzy they would have finished six or eight games away, possibly more.

Next Title Bout

In the wake of the Louis-Conn championship fight it is only natural that the new gossip should concern the next title contest. It was generally understood that if Louis retained his title his next fight would be against the winner of the Tami Mauriello - Jersey Joe Walcott elimination contest. If Conn won there was to be a repeat engagement, meaning the best two out of three.

Louis will have to have a September match for several reasons. One is need of money to pay his taxes and to square his account with Mike Jacobs. Another is that Joe isn't getting any younger and the years have begun to take their toll. He still can pick up another $90,000 net profit in a second fight.

Outside of Conn and Louis, the heavyweight picture has been shy of talent for some time. Now Conn is definitely out. Promoter Mike Jacobs has been trying to get a real challenger ready for the last three years, but the supply has been extremely thin. Lee Oma kicked himself out of the picture with his terrible showing against Jersey Joe Walcott. Oma set an all-time record for wrecking a show, for refusing to make any part of a fight. You can throw Oma out of any heavyweight picture that means anything.

Jersey Joe Walcott may not be much of a heavyweight, as far as champions go, and the same can be said of Tami Mauriello. Still they seem to be the only ones left who have shown anything worth looking at — and neither has shown too much. A Mauriello-Walcott meeting might be no part of a thriller—it doesn't figure to be—but at least it would be a clash between the two heavyweights who might slip into the spotlight in the wake of Louis and Conn.

Financially, the sooner such a fight is scheduled, perhaps the better. There has been an abnormal amount of loose money around.

The amazing thing is that during the five years intervening between the first and second Louis - Conn parties, no other heavyweight has been developed who has any class. One might think that over a five-year period, during which so much boxing was taught in the army and navy, some challenger would have been found. So far this is only an idle dream. Up to date no such animal has been developed.

We're not referring to the double feature bill at your favorite movie theater, but to the shows you produce every week right in your own self with the things that interest you most, and since your interests change with the wind, you're always shifting the scenery to conform with them. Let's peek through the keyhole and see what's playing!

Bulletin Bored—So it's Johnny Jones you're going Steady with now? His snapshots have supplanted last week's Joe in the center of your Bulletin Board and all around them you've tacked up souvenirs of your dates together: stubs from the movie theater, menus from the Corner Casbah — even the straws through which you drank that Double Malted—or was it Nectar and Ambrosia?—Wonder who'll be next in the place of Honor?

All-Star Cast—Under the glass top of your bureau or all around your mirror are your favorite spots for your current Screen Dream. Used to be Van almost exclusively, but Guy Madison and Peter Lawford are giving the Hubba with Freckles plenty of competition.

Models on Parade—You have a separate Bulletin Board or a wooden screen for pictures of your favorite Cover Girls from the fashion magazines. Right now, it's teen-age Betty Cornell who holds the No. 1 Spot in your bedroom displays.

To soften putty for removal from window panes, draw a hot soldering iron over the material, being careful to keep the heat away from the glass. Most putty, however, when it needs to be replaced, can be removed with a small screwdriver.

A basket equipped with such items as soap, polishes, short-handled brushes, sponge, clean and lintless dustcloths, and the like will save time in cleaning as you go from room to room.

Record the guests who have dined at your table by having them autograph the tablecloth. Then, before the next dinner, you can embroider each signature in outline stitch.

If you're planning to paint your house this summer and intend to do the work yourself, remember it is smart to let the first coat dry ten days before applying the second.

When game is on the menu, avoid handling before cooking by flouring this way: Put a small amount of flour in a paper sack, pour in the pieces of meat and shake the bag until each piece is well coated with flour.

If you prefer to close up the shelves where your canned goods are stored, try this trick. Fasten worn out window shades, still on rollers, to the top shelves and pull down to desired length.

In building a casement window in the kitchen remember that it should open out, not in. And the base should be at least a foot above the sink.

The oyster shell is good for something. Put it in the bottom of the tea kettle and it will prevent formation of hard-water scale.

TOP GRADE EGGS LIKELY TO HAVE BIG ADVANTAGE

Good care of eggs and egg sales on a grade basis will be increasingly profitable to farmers during the coming months, reports Ralph Baker, Iowa State College marketing specialist.

Baker points out that we are now in the season when the price spread between top grade eggs and the lower grades is increasing. With production dropping off and hot weather lowering quality, the number of top grade during the remainder of the eggs available will decrease summer.

Normally, egg prices rise from now until November, with the price of better eggs going up faster than the lower grades. This year, Baker says, the difference between these prices is likely to be greater than usual.

The production of top grade eggs doesn't require special equipment, Baker emphasizes. But it does mean giving some extra attention to egg care. Eggs should be gathered two or three times a day, preferably in wire baskets. After gathering, they should be taken immediatly to the basement and allowed to cool. When they are thoroughly cooled, they can be placed in the case with the small end down. The case should be kept in the basement, and the eggs should be marketed twice a week.

Plenty of clean nesting material will aid in keeping the eggs clean. Excelsor, wood shavings, timothy hay, crushed corn cobs or straw make a fairly good nest litters.

Baker also warns that if there are still old roosters around they should be sold immediately. Fertile eggs spoil mush more quickly than infertile ones.

G. I. PROMTED

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Jannsen, who reside southwest of Klemme, have received word that their son Roy has been promoted to T-4 and is with the armed forces in Lacey, Porto Rico. His wife left Mason City via plane July 5th to make her home with him and arrived in Lacey July 6th.

It's time to plant chives, cabbage, turnips, kohlrabi, winter radishes and endive. Kohlrabi is the only vegetable of this group that is excellent as a spring sown crop as well as a fall crop. The others, under normal Iowa conditions, are best grown as fall crops, and all of them are fine for winter storage.

Varieties of Chinese cabbage to plant are Chihli, Petsai and Wong Bok. Sow 6 to 8 seeds per hill. Space hills about 18 inches apart. When the seedlings are 3 or 4 inches tall, cut all seedlings off at ground level, except the strongest in each hill. Although common cabbage is easy to transplant, Chinese cabbage is usually set back too much to attempt transplanting.

Summer plantings of beets and carrots are now up. Gardeners who planted the seed deeper than in the spring and covered the rows with burlap or boards to hold moisture had good stands. Germination is normally poor in midsummer, unless these precautions are taken. Carrots and beets must be thinned out if they stand thicker than 3 inches apart in the row. The time to do this is before the seedlings get taller than about 3 inches. Thinning pays in much more uniform plants, better shape, higher quality and better production. It will pay to water carrots and beets where dry conditions exist.
